

SHALL WOMEN USE BALLOT?

Questions Debated at The Clearfield Chautauqua

GOOD POINTS ON BOTH SIDES

Mrs. D. J. Olyphant Speaks Against and Frank Stephens in Favor of Woman's Suffrage—Both Speakers Present Their Views in an Impassioned Manner—Argument Pro and Con Was Produced in a Convincing Way.

Women's suffrage was debated at Tuesday's sessions of the Clearfield chautauqua. Mrs. D. J. Olyphant took the negative side of the question at the afternoon meeting and Frank Stephens endorsed votes for women at the evening session. In the course of her remarks Mrs. Olyphant said:

Some people believe like the little child who misunderstood the story of creation when it was told to her and thought that God created man and then took his brains out and made woman. But sarcasm is not argument for either side. In this question it must be fundamental reasoning against theory. The anti-suffragists have been forced to take the stand that they do to refute the effect of their opponents' statements and to bring people to think intelligently of this vital question.

More Thought Needed.

There has been a maximum of feeling and a minimum of thought put upon the question. The fundamental subject is, will equal suffrage benefit conditions; will it remove menaces? Will women gain anything by the use of men's methods? In those states where equal suffrage exists it has not lessened her power when she loses her individuality by becoming a member of a political party, and this she eventually does when she gains the ballot. Her power is greatest when it is non-partisan. Woman's influence is a coherent and impassive power unmarred by political interests, and as such her power for good is greatest.

Woman in our nation have accomplished great good because they have not been hampered by the ballot. They have stood together and won the things that they wished. For woman to equalize herself with man means that she will lose his protection, and she will lose more than she has gained. Equal suffrage means equal responsibility and no additional powers.

Women Don't Need Vote.

Suffragists say, "Give us the ballot and we will readjust all existing wrongs." Woman's power to adjust wrong is greatest in the home. With additional civilization we are gaining better laws, and the men are equal to the task of doing it. Now woman has additional comfort and gracious service at her command; it is needless that she should vote.

By suffragist we are asked to believe that unless women have the ballot the old question of taxation without representation comes up. This statement is absurd, to say the least.

Man is not superior to woman because he has the power to vote, and woman is not inferior because she does not have it. It is simply a difference in function. Through specialization we reach the highest point. Woman is the home maker of the nation. Her greatest mission is the formation of the character of the future of the nation.

In those states where suffrage has been given it has not bettered the liquor question in the least.

A Preposterous Idea.

The laws of Pennsylvania as regards nearly all reforms are better than in Colorado where women have voted for 44 years. Equalized by the ballot women and men are on the same moral level. Where it has been tried the experiment of the equal vote was a failure.

To say that the fact that women do not have the ballot classes them with lunatics, idiots and criminals is preposterous. Men consider women as the highest of all ideals. To assert that they have not been just to woman or unwilling to sacrifice all for them is the basest of all falsehoods. Woman in the United States have more power than anywhere else in the world.

The anti-suffragists ask to be allowed to pursue their work as women, not as politicians. To be man's help-mate and companion is woman's mission, not to be his rival. Everywhere laws are being made to conserve the natural resources of the nation. The time has come to conserve the womanhood of the state and thus preserve the nation.

Equal Suffrage Inevitable.

Frank Stevens lectured in favor of woman suffrage last evening from the same platform upon which Mrs. Olyphant opposed equal suffrage in the afternoon. He said:

There is no doubt that in the end all people will accept equal suffrage as the only just settlement of

Huerta's Envoy Predicts End of Mexican Troubles

CARRANZA AT HEAD OF REBELS

Differences Between the Two Rebel Leaders Said to Have Been Amicably Adjusted—President Wilson in his Sympathy With the Constitutionalists, Declares Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs Fabela.

(By International News Service) New York, July 8—Senator Augustus Rodriguez, Huerta's senior representative in mediation, states that direct negotiations for peace will begin in a few days in New York.

Rodriguez says the mediators and the Carranza delegates will easily agree on a provisional president, after which there will be general amnesty in Mexico.

Carranza is Big Chief.

El Paso, Tex., July 8—Announcement came today officially that differences between the Mexican rebel leaders, Villa and Carranza have been healed and that "the war will go on in peace."

Villa wired his officials in Juarez to surrender the funds of the Carranza government, and it was given out at the Saltillo headquarters of Carranza that Villa would journey there and shake hands with Carranza and renew his pledge of loyalty to "the supreme chief."

Official statement of the points settled was kept a secret. Whether certain officials surrounding Villa and Carranza have been eliminated is not known, but the understanding of the lieutenants of the principals is "that certain changes will be made by both Carranza and Villa in the personnel of the men surrounding them."

Wilson With the Rebels.

Saltillo, Mexico, July 8—A breakfast in honor of General Carranza was given Sunday by the members of the Mexican casino at the country place known as Hacienda Manuel Gonzalez. Yaidro Fabela, minister of foreign relations, responded to a toast and made a plea for unity. He said:

"We have and do count on the sympathy of the American people. The wise American president Woodrow Wilson, is with the constitutionalists in heart, because he is an apostle of liberty."

Would be Welcome

A Wee Scotch Laddie
With Pipes and Kilts.

Surely a smart and handsome boy this in the Scotch kilts and with the pipes to his lips. Whether he is evolving music or not, the picture does not tell. Pictures do not give forth sound or we should know for sure. At any rate, he is making a brave show, this little Scotch laddie. Born in this country, he is of pure Scotch descent, although he never saw the rugged hills and clear lakes of the land of his father's birth. Proud he is of his ancestry and still more proud to be a citizen of the land of the free and perhaps a future president. Who knows? We have had several presidents of Scotch parentage, and we doubtless may have more. It is fine to be proud of your descent, but it is also a much grander thing to be in line for the presidency of the greatest of all nations—the United States of America.

Children's Songs in Scotland.
The kiddies of the land of heather like verse as well as the children of other countries, and they have many nice little rimes which correspond to those used in our own land. In fact, it is quite clear that some we use as our own are plagiarized straight from Scotland—such as

Rain, rain, go away
Come again some other day
When I brew and when I bake
I'll gie you a little cake

The rain has a reputation for being somewhat of a spoil sport in bouny Scotland, and many of the rimes, such as the above, hold a very clear wish on the part of the children that the rain man keep his distance. Coming down as they have through the centuries, it is scarce to be wondered at that many of the verses have become simply doggerel without a vestige of meaning to our modern ears—for instance, the following:

Rain, rain, rattle stones,
Dinna rain on me,
But rain on John O'Groat's house,
Far across the sea.

When the snow flies the children use this little rime:
The men of the east
Are pyking their noses
And sending their feathers here away
When a high wind sweeps over the heather they sing:

Arthur O'Bover has broken his bands,
And he's come roving over the lands.
The king of Scots wif a' his power
Canna turn Arthur o' Bowel

The Bazaar on Wheels.

A pushcart fair is an amusing outdoor entertainment that will be novel to most. You can hire the carts for a small sum, and you get rid of the work of trimming booths. Those who have charge of the carts should wear the costumes of different peoples—Italians, Germans, negroes, Greeks or any others that fancy may select.

Articles for sale are arranged on the carts and sold from them as from ordinary booths. There are pushcarts for fancy articles, others for household things, still others for candy, for toys and for lemonade and cake, for cream or tea. If you can get a band and have pretzels and "sausages" sold from the German cart so much the better. The "sausages" are for the grab bag—small articles rolled in long folds of brown crane paper tied with fine string at each end.

A pushcart supper will furnish much amusement. Cups and saucers, plates, and so on, are bargained for at the first cart, and the supper itself is gathered piecemeal from the display on the various carts.—Youth's Companion.

Chum Saved Himself.

A little dog, unlabeled, had been found in the streets and taken to the pound. He was an affectionate animal and greatly endeared himself to all about the place. They called him Chum, and he joyfully responded whenever his name was spoken. As the days passed other poor, homeless dogs were put to death. Finally came Chum's last day of grace and no one had come to claim him. The next morning dawned, and the man who was to kill Chum called him into the yard. Chum danced and wagged his tail, no doubt thinking something good was in store for him. The man then said: "Well, Chum, your time has come. You'd better say your prayers." Immediately the little forepaws were crossed, the little head bowed, and Chum said his prayers. As the little body was still in this attitude of reverence a step was heard. The attendant looked up and saw the superintendent standing there. There were tears in the eyes of each Chum is still living, but instead of being nobody's dog he is now everybody's.—St. Louis Republic.

Waves and Their Uses.

Waves are used on the ocean and in hair. They come in crests, breakers and curling irons. They are also put up in either when they cannot be seen, and you have to take the dealer's word that you are getting your money's worth.

Warm waves are common to both summer and winter. In summer they come just when, owing to the delightful weather and a careful perusal of the Old Farmers' Almanac, you have made all your arrangements to stay home. In winter, when you have filled your furnace with two or three tons of coal and turned on all the drafts, until you have a bed of coals that would take a blue ribbon in hades and nobody can put it out but the fire department.

Waves are also seen in Wall street. Little lambs can be seen occasionally sitting upon their crests until another wave comes along and knocks them over.—Life.

Amundsen's Training.

Captain Roald Amundsen, the Norwegian who put the south pole on the map, was born in Sykkobra, Norway, July 16, 1872. His youth was spent in Christiania and on board sealers and whalers commanded by his father, Captain Jens Amundsen. He was twenty-five when he entered on his first south polar trip as the first officer of the Belgica expedition. This journey lasted two years and filled the young sailor with aspirations for further explorations in the frozen regions. His parents wanted him to become a physician, and he spent a year in a medical college. Later he went to Germany to study sciences that would aid him as an explorer. His first notable feat was to take a ship through the northwest passage, and on this trip he twice wintered in the ice.—New York World.

The Norman "Oyez."

Not many persons realize that the court crier says "oyez, oyez, oyez." Instead of "harken, harken, harken," because of a chance visit that William the Conqueror made to an English court almost 900 years ago.

William had overrun England, seized the government and placed himself at its head. Happening to enter a courtroom, he heard the crier call the assemblage to order in English. William rebuked him and on the spot decreed that the business of all English courts should be transacted in Norman French, his native tongue. Afterward the courts went back to English, but to this day "oyez, oyez, oyez," clings to court customs wherever the English language is spoken as a reminder of the great Norman who whipped King Harold in the battle of Hastings.

The Governor's Dog.

A certain ex-governor of a certain state was extravagantly fond of his dogs. One day he saw his youngest son kick a favorite blooded pup.

"You unmanly young cub!" roared the state parent. "How dare you kick my dog? I'll teach you to behave yourself better, sir!"

When the offender was soundly thrashed the father wiped the perspiration from his forehead.

"Let this be a lesson to you," he said, "how to treat my dogs. And, now that I think of it, you've been disrespectful to your mother of late, sir!"—New York Post.

On the Last Lap.

"Saw an odd race yesterday?"
"Indeed?"
"Yes, it was between two dogs—a fox terrier and a dachshund."

"Well?"
"Two saucers of milk were placed in front of them and the object was to see which could lick up his first."

"Which won the race?"
"The dachshund won in the last lap!"—Florida Times Union.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat also take glass of Salt before eating breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Told of a Poet's "Maid."

One would like to think that Eliza Crowley, Browning's old housekeeper, was "the maid" in a story told by Browning to Grant Duff. While the poet was away on holiday in the summer of 1879 a man called at his house and, telling "the maid" that he was connected with the press, asked if it was true that Mr. Browning was dead. "I have not heard so," was the answer, "and I am sure my master is not the kind of man to do such a thing without letting me know." "Oh, I assure you," said the inquirer, "people of that sort often die in that way." Dickens did so and Thackeray likewise.—London Chronicle.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Men Do It Because They Are More Tentative Than Women.

A German professor who has been making a study of the problem declares that men fall asleep in church because they pay more attention to the sermon than do the women. Further, he declares the average woman does not begin to grasp the purport of the sermon; that she is far slower of understanding than man.

The man will watch the minister every minute, he will concentrate all his mind upon the preacher and what he is saying, he will watch his every gesture and every motion of his lips and listen to every word until finally he drops off to sleep simply because he has watched so steadily, gazed so intently, that he hypnotized himself.

If the woman does not grasp the meaning of the sermon so readily, if her mentality is not quite so keen and quick, one would think she would fall asleep. But the fact remains that she has plenty to interest her. A man can not look about the church and be interested in John Jones' cravat or William Smith's vest or Sam White's cuff buttons. He doesn't care anything about them, but a woman will sit quietly in church, she will hear what the minister is saying without giving much thought to it, but she will be interested in everything every other woman is wearing, and there is enough to keep her just moderately entertained and wide awake.—Chicago Tribune.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent, "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil, comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'—London

GREAT MEETING AT PITTSBURGH

Equalled in Size and Enthusiasm Demonstration of 1913

PREDICTS NOVEMBER RESULT

Penrose and His Lieutenants Submerged by the Great Wave of Enthusiasm Aroused for Progressive Candidate by the Visit of Former President.

Philadelphia, July 8.—Washington party leaders are jubilant over the unmistakable significance of the great Progressive gathering at Pittsburgh on Tuesday, June 30. Gifford Pinchot, candidate for United States senator; William Draper Lewis, candidate for governor; State Chairman A. Nevin Detrich and other leaders returned to Philadelphia from the second annual Progressive conference absolutely convinced that success is no longer a matter of speculation but of plurality. The Pittsburgh gathering was peculiarly adapted as a test of what may be expected in the November election in Pennsylvania. It was the occasion of the first big political speech made by Colonel Roosevelt since his return from South America. The speech was delivered in the same hall in which the colonel spoke in the spring primary campaign of 1912 when the state had run riot with pro-Roosevelt and anti-Penrose feeling. It was therefore an excellent opportunity for observing whether the spirit of western Pennsylvania had undergone any decided change and whether it was true or not, as the Penrose managers so frantically claim, that the Progressives have returned to Penrose's party.

Those who attended the wonderful 1912 demonstration had to rub their eyes on Tuesday to make sure that they were not back again in the midst of that stirring contest.

For exactly the same scenes were re-enacted. A small army met Colonel Roosevelt at the depot and ran beside his automobile the several squares to the place where the Progressive dinner was held. Spacious Exposition hall was again packed to suffocation and again the tremendous crowd shouted its welcome to Roosevelt. His every appearance was the signal for outbursts of enthusiasm. It was 1912 over again.

It was particularly significant because both Penrose and his immediate advisers and the Democratic state leaders were in Pittsburgh on the same day. But there was even a contrast to be studied. Penrose and the Democrats were absolutely submerged under the wave of Roosevelt enthusiasm.

Encouraged by the evident spirit rampant in Pittsburgh, Gifford Pinchot returned to Philadelphia to start at once the renewal of his automobile tour of the state. Before leaving he commented briefly upon the Pittsburgh meeting and its significance:

"The splendid enthusiasm exhibited by the great throngs that attended the Progressive rally only confirmed what I have seen thus far in my tour of the state," he said.

"It is perfectly evident that this is to be our year in Pennsylvania. Of course, in the light of the Pittsburgh event, it would be foolish to attempt any argument as to whether the Progressive spirit is alive or not. Of course it is. It is not only alive but spreading. It is greater than it was in 1912.

"Everything that has occurred in this campaign has demonstrated that fact. And as the campaign draws on toward its close it will become increasingly evident even to the blind followers of Penrose.

"Of course we are going to win this year. We are going to put Penrose and his machine out of business and when we do we will set our hands to the task of giving to Pennsylvania the kind of government which will bring real prosperity to all of her people."

PINCHOT A PRACTICAL WORKER

Dwight B. Heard of Arizona, one of the best known stockmen of the west and a powerful influence for range conservation, writes:

"Gifford Pinchot is not a theorist or a carpet knight, but a man who has again and again got next to the real nub of conservation questions by riding the trail through the western countries, living on plain cowman's grub, packing his tarpaulin and blankets with him, and sleeping where his work found him."

Excellent German Roads.

Great attention is paid by the city of Magdeburg, Prussia, to its bicycle roads. One can ride many miles in the country on smooth stretches of road.

Modern Proverb.

Lo, it is easy to be happy when the sun shineth and the birds sing and thine aches are forgotten, drat 'em.—Meditations of Jeremiah of Joppa.

The Difference.

An Atchison man who never held one job over two weeks, died not long ago, and people said he was a genius out of his sphere. When he was alive they said he was a loafer.—Atchison Globe.

Sheeder's Factory to Home Piano Sale

The Talk of the Town

Opened on JUNE 25th and will continue until July 25th

Our Semi-Annual Factory to Home Sale of Pianos and Player-Pianos began Thursday, June 25th, from which date we offer our entire stock of New and Used Pianos and Player-Pianos at a reduction in price of from 15 to 50 per cent. below our regular price.

During this sale the regular policy of this House will be persued and there will be no inflations of values before discounts are computed as is the custom of many Piano Houses who follow this line of selling as well as many others such as coupons, club sale schemes and etc.

One can readily appreciate the real saving to you when you realize that all BAUMEISTER and ARCHER PIANOS offered in this sale are sold from FACTORY TO HOME direct and that on every instrument the discount is from 15 to 50 per cent. less than any dealer or Carry All House who sell Pianos of the same grade.

Its a simple analysis. A dealer must pay the jobbers profit who in turn must pay the Manufacturers profit before selling to you.

We as manufacturers sell you direct thereby obviating the extra profit which you necessarily must pay the dealer.

As we have previously stated Mr. Fred T. Sheeder proprietor of the SHEEDER MUSIC HOUSE is Vice Pres. of the Baumeister Piano Co., and Pres. of the Archer Piano Co., and he is almost constantly at their spacious and well equipped factory at 511-519 East 72nd St., New York City, giving his personal attention and supervision in the manufacture of these goods, this you see gives us a decided advantage over all competitors and enables us to offer a product which we know is just what we recommend it to be and know what we are talking about when we say these goods are the best that brains, skill and money can produce.

We have been at our present location over 16 years, in that time the Baumeister Piano has been placed in a great many homes in Clearfield and vicinity, some numbering amongst the best citizens of our town and community, a list of which you will find in this advertisement. If you are in the least doubt as to the merits of these Pianos please call at our store and we will be more than pleased to furnish sufficient information, so convincing in character that you will cheerfully join the Army of the Baumeister and Archer enthusiasts.

WHAT?

What will become of all the trout that were not caught in tobacco stores this summer?

Good evening! There is something about these evenings which must remind you of the days when you went courting and it was too cool to sit outside and too warm to go into the house.

Can't see that that part of Third street lying between Market and the first alley to the north has been improved by the rains. A steam shovel might remove the accumulation of filth on that stretch of street.

Parents should encourage their young sons to join the Boy Scout movement. Better have your son wear a khaki suit than one with stripes on it.

Are you enjoying the entertainment at the chautauqua?

GET TOGETHER.

While the citizens of Clearfield are congratulating themselves over the fact that they had the best, the cleanest and the most orderly celebration of the Fourth of July of any town in this part of the state, they should not overlook the fact that this successful celebration was the result of the combined energy and goodwill of the citizens. The union of the intelligence and progressiveness of the citizens made the big industrial parade of the Fourth a success.

The same amount of energy and perseverance on the part of the citizens as a whole, directed toward the acquirement of new industries, in purchasing water works, and in making Clearfield one of the most beautiful and cleanest towns in Pennsylvania would bring results equally gratifying to every citizen of Clearfield. The ancient saying that in union there is strength is as true today as when it was uttered, and if the citizens of Clearfield unite on any project in which the whole town is interested they can work wonders in the coming years.

THE VOICE OF TRUTH.

There is nothing the Penrose party in Pennsylvania fear more than they do the voice of truth. If the truth is told of Penroseism in this state this year the result of the election will be the defeat of the agent of special privilege. The Penrose Republicans know this, hence they are very anxious to have the impression go out that Colonel Roosevelt will not speak in behalf of the Washington ticket in Pennsylvania this year.

Colonel Roosevelt's voice was injured during his strenuous exploration trip into Brazil, but he discovered at Pittsburgh that he is still able to make an audience hear him without endangering his vocal chords. And he means to speak in Pennsylvania during the present campaign, telling the truth about Penroseism in a way that will impress upon the minds of the voters the necessity for removing from political power the man who for years has ignored the people and performed the commands of the Standard Oil company and other special privilege combinations.

the matter. The question is a vital one. To say that to give women the ballot will give her additional responsibility which will be unwelcome to her seems absurd to me. To think that any real woman would not be glad of the additional responsibility is ridiculous.

The subject divides itself into three divisions at once; they are: That the matter is not an accident but a long series of events; that the subject is so near at hand that you can not neglect to consider it, and that it is your duty as a man or woman to consider it.

The question has been up for ages, through out development of all people there has always had to be a climbing to the realization of higher things.

Movement is Growing.

Eighty years ago little had been said on the subject, now all civilized nations are considering it and many have adopted it. After eleven years of trial in Australia the measure was voted a success and adopted. The congress of Mothers of the World, which meets only every five years, adopted equal suffrage at their last meeting. There are fifty suffragist headquarters in London today. In the United States the question has come to be a highly agitated one. The world has awakened to the fact that it needs the woman's vote.

Our nation, when it adopted the common law of England, refused to woman the liberties that she had helped to win.

In spite of being without the ballot the American woman has caused two great English statesmen to say: "The strength of America lies in the superiority of her women and the United States owes more to her women than to any other factor in the nation."

Equal suffrage was introduced into Wyoming, it is true, as a joke at first, but was found so valuable that she refused to come into the union as a state unless with equal suffrage.

Ballot Belongs to Woman.

All the political parties are pledged to suffrage, and it is only a question of time until it will be a universal law. Right is always in the minority at first. There can be no more direct denial of the right of woman to the ballot. It is hers as rightfully as it is man's. True, some women do not want it, but that does not make it any more just to refuse it to the woman who does.

One of the arguments against suffrage is to say that it is unadvisable to vote. That is the only argument that cannot answer not being a lady. Another is that woman can not serve the country in time of war. True, they can not bear arms, but they are the mothers of the men who do. And, anyway, war is a curse that will soon be a thing of the past.

Would Purify Politics.

The suffragist idea is not to compel women who do not wish to, to vote, but to compel men to permit those who wish to, to do so. It is a question of right, not duty, that is involved.

Party politics has come to a place where some men say it is impos-

IN THE MOVIES

LUCILLE LOVE IS CAPTURED AGAIN

The Girl of Mystery Has Another Hairbreadth Escape

The eleventh of the "Lucille" series, starts with her escape from Hugo Loubeque's Mexican ranch, where she was held prisoner, and she falls into a veritable hotbed of revolutionary activity. While hiding from a troop of rebel soldiers she overhears a number of Mexicans plotting against an American ranchman. Out of sympathy for her countrymen she hurried to them and tells them of the danger which threatens. Instantly the cowboys fly to arms and meet the advancing soldiers. In the height of a fierce battle, with schrapnel and bombs bursting about her, Lucille is grabbed from her horse by a Mexican and carried away from the scene of battle to a strange hacienda, which is used as a line of operation by the Mexican troops in the vicinity. How she escapes in an auto, disguising herself in men's clothes and enters Hugo Loubeque's home to get the papers she has left some time before, and how she finally is confronted by Loubeque himself, and in fact all her troubles are shown in this line 2-reel picture at the Opera House tonight.

If you want to laugh, and then just keep on laughing you should see Ford Sterling at the Opera House tonight in one of his funniest farces, entitled "When Smaltz Loved." Mr. Sterling is certainly an adept in the line of real funny German comedians.

able to induce men to stick to their party without buying them. Parties are looking to the woman's ballot to give them hope. Women will eventually make mistakes at first. They will not remove at once, the black stains from the politics of the nation, but they will purify them, because they are the mothers of the world and will advocate those things which will better the world.

pert musicians from Italy—play the best music in the best way.

Thursday Evening.

At 7:30 there will be a concert by the Avon players, who will play "The Toy Symphony". At 7:45 a xylophone and piano performance will be given by Robert Starback and his sister and at 8:15 Chauncey J. Hopkins will lecture on "Bright Eyes and Wild Hearts of Our North Woods, or Hunting With a Camera."

A direct descendant of the great Daniel Boone, Dr. Hawkins holds within him the heart of an irresistible hunter. Game of all sorts has been his quarry—bears, moose, deer, lynxes, partridges—all have fallen alike his victims, yet he has never shed their blood. His hunting was done with a camera, and the game he "shot" was never harmed. He is bringing his "bag of game" with him, the most wonderful set of wild animal photographs in existence. His lecture is full of thrills and human interest, and local lovers of nature should hear it.

What the Old Man Feared.

The head of a certain Washington family was recently approached by his son just nearing his majority. "Father," said he, "I want to have a talk with you concerning my future. I have decided to become an artist. Have you any objections?"

The old man scratched his head reflectively and replied: "Well, no, son—provided, of course, that you don't draw on me."—Lippincott's.

Grouchy.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snooze. "To prevent the marriage of weak-minded persons. What do you think of it?" "I think it's rot," answered Mr. Grouchy. "Why, who else ever wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

An Exception.

Mudge—Here's a man figured out that if all the money in the world were divided equally each adult would get about $30. Meeg—He's wrong. My wife would get $60.—Boston Transcript.

Just Gossip.

"There is a great deal of gossip about Gwendolyn's eyebrows." "Don't mind it. Her eyebrows are not as black as they are painted."—Baltimore American.

Porpoise—What is the whale blowing about? Dolphin—Oh, he got so many notices for his feat in swallowing Jonah he's been blowing ever since.—Ex-

"Regeneration" is another reel that will please all, and say—the weather is just fine for going to the movies.

Myrtle Stedman, once with Selig, is playing leads in the Jack London pictures being released by Hobart Bosworth. Hobart Bosworth, it will be recalled, was with the Selig also.

Grace Cunard, the girl who plays "Lucille," recently refused to play in a scene with rats. Therefore certain portions of the Lucille series are being cut out to meet her requirements.

"A Beggar Prince of India" is the title of a stirring three-reel romantic adventure play, featuring Walter Miller and Irene Wallace in the leads, now in course of production at the Victor studio. N. J. Edward Warren is directing the piece.

Herbert Rawlinson, leading man in Otis Turner's special feature company (Universal) not only loves to be an ideal type of American manhood, but such is actually the case. Mr. Rawlinson is one of the most well known amateur athletes in Southern California. He has medals for swimming and rowing, and has only recently acquired a biplane with no other motive in view than the outdoor sport it will afford.

"May we do your head in bronze?" King Edward, President Wilson and Mark Twain are among those whose faces we have preserved to future generations.

So wrote an art company to Jack Warren Kerrigan, handsome star of the Victor productions Universal.

"Phew!" said the actor, when he received the letter. "Some classy company I'm in—a monarch, a president, and a humorist."

The KITCHEN CABINET

Only the busy person is happy—and systematic, daily, useful work is man's greatest blessing.

Mother nature is kind, and if she deprives us of one thing she gives us another—happiness seems meted out to each and all in equal portions.

DELICIOUS SUMMER DESSERTS.

There is no dessert that quite gratifies the taste like a frozen one in hot weather. The combinations are legion, but the most popular are those made of fruit juices.

Italian Sherbet.—Boil together 15 minutes, one pound of sugar and one pint of water. Set aside to cool; when cold add half a cupful of lemon juice, a cupful and a half of orange juice, the same amount of grape fruit juice. Strain and freeze slowly. Serve heaped in the half shells of the oranges or grape fruit.

Raspberry Cream.—A cupful of raspberry juice, a cupful of sugar and a pint of cream used in this proportion, adding a tablespoonful of lemon juice to add to the color as well as flavor, makes a most delicious frozen dish.

Orange and Lemon Cream.—This is a recipe which may be made at any season, as such fruit is nearly always to be found in the market. Take the juice of three oranges, two lemons, two cupfuls of sugar and a quart of thin cream. Strain the fruit juice, add the sugar and when dissolved add the cream, and freeze.

Chocolate ice cream with marshmallow sauce is an especially good combination. To make the ice cream add the melted chocolate to a plain ice cream, mixing well. For the sauce—Cut a fourth of a pound of marshmallows in pieces and melt in a double boiler. Dissolve a fourth of a cupful of confectioners sugar in a fourth of a cupful of boiling water and add gradually to the marshmallows. Continue stirring until well blended. Cool before serving.

Chocolate sauce is always a favorite with plain ice cream. Melt slowly one square of bitter chocolate, add a tablespoonful of butter, one cupful of sugar and a third of a cupful of boiling water. Boil 15 minutes. Add the butter when nearly done, also a teaspoonful of vanilla when the sauce is cool.

Nellie Maxwell.

Duty of Charitable.

We give most worthily when we assume the worthy use of our gifts. The idle flinging of a coin to an undeserving beggar is not true benevolence; it is a cheap and easy way of buying relief to our own feelings. So to give to any cause which does not wisely and economically expend its receipts is foolish charity. In a word, it is as much a part of a giver's duty to examine financial reports as it is to read appeals for aid.

The Mysterious Thyroid.

The thyroid gland, which is situated about the lower part of the throat, is still a medical mystery.

Practically nothing is known as to its uses and very little about the cause of disease in it. Goiter is a nonmalignant enlargement of the thyroid gland. The swelling may be no more than a mere thickening, or it may grow into a mass weighing several pounds. It is common in mountainous districts and where there is magnesium limestone in the soil and drinking water. Operation may be necessary, but goiter will usually yield to treatment and is rarely fatal. Malignant disease of the thyroid gland is often associated with overstrain or sudden shock. Here operation is generally necessary and is a very serious matter indeed. In some mysterious way removal of the thyroid gland affects the mental powers, and the unfortunate person who has his thyroid removed is in great danger of losing his wits, more particularly his memory.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fiddled Into Office.

Lossing relates that in 1848 he met at Oswego, N. Y., Major Cochran, then nearly eighty years old, a son-in-law of General Philip Schuyler, who told the story of his election to congress during the administration of the elder Adams. A vessel was to be launched on one of the lakes in interior New York, and people came from afar to see it. The young folks gathered there, determined to have a dance at night. There was a fiddle, but no fiddler. Young Cochran was an amateur performer, and his services were demanded. He grunted the joyous company, and at the supper table one of the gentlemen remarked in commendation of his talents that he was "fit for congress." The matter was talked up, and he was nominated and elected a representative in congress for the district then comprising the whole of New York west of Schenectady. He always claimed to have "fiddled himself into congress."

Awkwardly Put.

She—So sorry to hear of your motor accident. Motorist—Oh, thanks. It's nothing. Expect to live through many more. She—Oh, but I hope not.—Boston Transcript.

To have what we want is riches, but to be able to do without is power.—MacDonald

NOTES

New York, July 8—The New York American League Club Tuesday completed a deal which Birdie Cree, for years the star fielder of the club, was purchased from the Baltimore Internationals. Cree was sold to Baltimore last winter. He had had a poor season in 1913 after breaking an arm in 1912. His work with Baltimore was so good Chance decided to recall him.

Olympian yesterday won the second race of the powerboat trials to select a challenger for the Richardson trophy now held by Canada. Michigan, which won the first race, was second; Valiant was third and South Shore fourth. Pitcher, Edward Manning, recently purchased by the Rochester club, International league, from the St. Louis Americans, was run over by an automobile at Rochester, N. Y., yesterday and his foot injured. He was taken to an emergency hospital, and will be laid up for some time.

Eddie Mattison, former manager of the DuBois team, who is now with the Philadelphia Nationals, pitched his first game on Monday, for that team and although he lost, pitched a wonderful game. He struck out seven, as compared to one of the opposing pitcher, and walked two.

Welch Defeats Ritchie.

Olympia Stadium, London, July 8—After knocking at the pugilistic door of fame for the last eight years, Freddie Welch of Pontypridd, Wales, lightweight champion of England, won the world's lightweight championship in the famous Olympia Stadium last night. Referee Eugene Corri awarded the Welshman the decision over Willie Ritchie, the American champion, after 20 rounds of fierce fighting.

Not one person in all the great throng that viewed the fight questioned the decision of the referee. It was generally agreed that Welch had fairly won. It was simply a case of Welch's ring generalship and his all-round skill measured against Ritchie's youth, his willingness and his aggressiveness and the former qualities won.

Would you be kind enough to issue a challenge through your paper on behalf of Paddy Krause (118 pounds) and Jack Levan (156 to 160 pounds), both white, to meet any boys in your locality. They are both good boys and can deliver the goods. If the Clearfield sports can dig up a pair to meet them, we can easily come to terms. A. BOULDIN, Mgr.: 329 Howard Ave., Altoona, Pa.

HAD FAITH IN HIS IDEAS.

Julius Verne Felt the Things He Wrote Would Come to Pass.

Anything new about that wonderful man, Julius Verne, is invariably interesting. And in the Paris Temps Felix Duquesnel, who knew the author well, tells quite a lot about him that is "not generally known."

"I believe I invent possible things," Verne used to say, "which is very naive of me, because all that I write will be realized. Human knowledge will demolish the impossible." But if he believed in the realization of his imaginings his friends did not at first believe that he would be successful as an author.

One day, according to M. Duquesnel, when Verne was in the company of a number of his friends, he exclaimed with great seriousness:

"Mes enfants, I think I am about to leave you. I have the idea which, according to Girardin, is necessary to a man if he is going to make his fortune. I am going to write a romance in a new form of my own invention. If it succeeds it will be, I'm certain, the lode of the gold mine."

The friends laughed. "Laugh away," said Verne, "we shall see who laughs last." A few weeks later "Five Weeks in a Balloon" appeared and was an immediate success. He had found his "lode," which he continued to develop for half a century.—London Letter in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Promises in Politics.

During a municipal campaign in Chicago a politician dropped in one morning to see a certain grocer. During the conversation that took place the politician asked, "And I may count upon your support, may I not?"

"Why, no, I am sorry to say," replied the grocer, "the fact is, I have promised my support to the other candidate."

The politician laughed. "Ah," said he, "in politics promising and performing are two different things."

"In that case," said the grocer cordially, "I shall be glad to give you my promise, sir."—Lippincott's.

How to Plaster.

To repair holes or cracks in walls, secure some fresh mortar. Clean out the holes with a brush, remove all loose plaster thoroughly, wet the slabs and old plaster with a sponge, fill up the hole or cracks with fresh mortar, put down even. In a few hours go over again with knife or trowel. Close holes in woodwork with a paste made of glue and fine sawdust.

ADVOCATES CHANGE IN RULES

Most Astute Baseball Men Admit Problem of Intentional Pass is Hard Problem to Solve.

Jim McGuire, for many years a leading major league catcher and now acting as coach and scout for the Detroit team, declares that the greatest and best change in the rules of baseball was that making foul balls strikes if the batsman has less than two strikes upon him. Says McGuire: "The rule met the problem brought up by the constant fouling off of balls by batters until the poor pitcher was tired, and because of sheer exhaustion had to put the ball over the plate with nothing on it but the hide that the factory endowed it with. It was an easy matter for some of the clever men of yesteryear to foul off a dozen balls until that one clothed in nakedness lobbed up to the plate for slaughter."

"The next problem that must be faced and solved is the intentional pass affair. There is apparently no way in which to force a pitcher to pitch to a man if he wants to pass him. It has become so bad nowadays that the managers of the clubs simply tell their men when to pass certain batters and the pitcher and catcher go through the motions of pitching to him, while the crowds in the grand stand generally howl in derision. They always do it if it's a home man at bat, with a couple of men waiting to score and one run needed to tie."

"This is the one problem that the most astute baseball men in the country admit there seems to be no solution for. They also admit that it is a problem that must be solved."

"It is only in recent years that the intentional pass problem has come up. Back in the old days there was no such thing as the intentional pass. It wasn't considered a game or a necessary thing. But today it is considered a part of strategic baseball."

"Even the best batsmen hit safely only about one in four times. A 300 hitter gets three hits in ten times officially at bat. He faces a pitcher oftener than that, however, with his passes and bases for being hit by pitched ball."

"The odds are all with the pitcher even when facing the best batters. Nevertheless, few managers refuse to use the intentional pass and how they can be forced to discard it is the question that must be settled."

CHARLIE DOON VERY LUCKY

Despite Ravages of Federal's Philadelphia National Team is Making Excellent Showing.

Charlie Doon has been lucky. The Federals tried to ruin his team, and did succeed in shooting his infield full of holes, but though they robbed him of Seaton, Brennan and Camnitz they failed to weaken his pitching staff.

Instead of standing out in the league with almost no pitching, the Philadel-

Grover Cleveland Alexander.

Alexander. Chalmers has come through in great shape, while Mayer and Marshall have developed and now appear to be dependable twirlers.

Besides this, he has grabbed two youngsters who are likely to show a lot before the year ends. Oeschger and Jacobs look as though they had the goods and only need a little more experience to deliver.

The infield problem, however, is not solved. The loss of Doolan and Knabe has been serious.

Good Sunday Combination.

President Ward of the Brooklyn Feds will permit his team to play on Sundays. Branch Rickey refuses to manage his crew on Sunday, and Mathewson refuses to pitch on Sundays. Why not make Rickey Ward's manager and Matty his star pitcher?

His Jinx a Sticker.

George Dauss cannot overcome his St. Louis jinx, it seems. The young right-hander always has a lot of stuff against the Browns but is seldom very successful in getting it past the batters.

What She Was Doing.

One evening the mother of a small miss aged five said: "I see that you are yawning; it's time you were in bed." "Oh, that wasn't a yawn, mama," replied Grace. "I was merely practicing a new kind of smile."

Reincarnated.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.

"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."

This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

His Thirst.

Husband—May, just send up some filtered water. Wife—Which was it last night, "Detained at the office" or "A friend at the club?" Husband—Why? Wife—Because I didn't know whether you wanted a tumbler or a painful.—London Opinion.

Cookery Points*Cabbage For Salads.

There are so many ways of using cold boiled cabbage for warming up in some way that it is not often enough thought of as salad material. But cold cabbage with a French dressing makes a good salad, and the coarse outer green leaves of new cabbage, which would not be good in the uncooked salad, can be advantageously used in this way. It may be shredded and used with beets and other cooked vegetables with a cooked dressing as a salad.

The soft creamy dressings are favored with cabbage salad, but French dressing with cream is of all the most quickly put together and comparatively little known. To make this put the seasonings of salt and pepper with the oil, add the cream in about equal quantities and then the vinegar, drop by drop, stirring rapidly. This is a little quicker method than dropping the cream drop by drop into French dressing, and if carefully done the cream will not curdle. It is delicious and thicker than vinegar and cream simply.

Prettier and more elaborate salads can be made with cabbage than those who regard this as a vulgar vegetable imagine. It may be mixed with dice of celery and then garnished with either minced boiled beef or grated carrot, or both, these being put on it so as to form a cross or in stripes.

Shredded green peppers added to cabbage make it seem a little more elegant as a salad, and a teaspoonful of freshly grated horseradish sprinkled thoroughly through shredded cabbage before a cream dressing is added makes it a most excellent spring salad. The bacon dressings are homely, but bits of cold bacon scattered through the salad may be highly acceptable.

For compound salads, which are salads made of little heaps or mounds of different colors—green, red, yellow, white or any shade preferable—the cabbage, scalded and made creamy looking, then crisped, is serviceable.

Cookery Kinks.

Have you ever cried—
Cooking apricots and dried peaches together?

Cooking a few bits of orange peel with baked apples or pears?

Combining in a salad cold cooked diced beets and carrots dressed with mayonnaise dressing?

Putting a sprig of mint in the water in which potatoes are boiling to give them an odd and delicious flavor?

Serving salmon with slices of orange instead of lemon?

Making strawberry frosting for cake by simply mashing five or six red berries and mixing with confectioner's sugar until stiff enough to spread?

Using equal parts of cold boiled macaroni, cooked diced carrots and canned or fresh peas to make a novel salad?

Preserving Eggs.

When eggs are plentiful and can be bought cheaply obtain from a reliable source new laid eggs, placing these in jars. Obtain a tin of water glass sufficient for a great many eggs, which dissolve according to instruction on tin and pour over the eggs, tie down, and when eggs are dear these can be used for all cooking purposes and will be found to poach or boil like fresh ones. When taking out of the liquid rinse in warm water and prick with a needle those for boiling to prevent cracking in the process. Take out of preserving liquid only as required for use.

Spanish Rice.

For a meat substitute, rice cooked in this way cannot be excelled. It is also a great time and fuel saver. Into a buttered casserole put one-half cupful washed rice, add one-half cupful grated cheese, five small onions sliced thinly, one large cupful of canned tomatoes, two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls milk, one-eighth teaspoonful pepper, one cupful hot water and, lastly, two tablespoonfuls of minced pickles or olives. Bake until rice is tender in moderate oven, usually one hour.

Spaghetti in Chafing Dish.

Cook the spaghetti until tender, and it can be broken up or not as one prefers, although it takes an expert to serve it when not cut up. When the spaghetti has been drained add to it one tablespoonful butter, a cupful of milk in which has been stirred a tablespoonful of flour, mustard, salt and pepper. Stir until it boils, then allow to simmer a few minutes and then stir in tomato sauce that has been made with strained tomatoes in which a bit of onion has been cooked. Serve with the dish hot.

Substitute For Whipped Cream.

Put about two quarts of fresh buttermilk into a close muslin bag, with a pinch of salt. Hang it up, with a basin under it, and leave for twenty-four hours to let the water drip out. Turn the curds on to a plate, sweeten to taste, add a few drops of vanilla essence or other flavoring and whip up.

Economy in Coffee Making.

Save the coffee grounds, boil them up in fresh water and strain. Boil the liquid and use it instead of water when making fresh coffee. This is done in France and improves the coffee, besides being very economical, as less coffee is needed.

THE RIGHT SHADE.

An Important Point in the Selection of the Smart Costume.

RED CHARMEUSE EVENING GOWN.

It is wise to study the season's colors, especially if you can afford but one gown or suit or hat, so that whatever is new in your wardrobe may be of absolutely the correct shade.

The very deep shades of blue are fashionable not only for the street, but in the evening. In fact, the night and indigo blues threaten to oust black for the quieter sort of dinner costumes.

In transparent materials pastel blues and greens are very good indeed, and there is a smoky tone of gray that is pronounced charming by women who have hitherto favored steel and slate shades.

All the golden brown shades are good for street costumes. For evening use there is a tone of orange as fiery yellow as the amberine, but which is, oddly enough, beautiful in malines and chiffon.

Ultra-fashionables take up the richer shades of red, as seen in the ripe currant or the flame of a wood fire. There is also a blue vermillion tone, which is more like a half ripe plum than anything else in nature.

Red charmeuse draped with white chandilly lace was used in the development of this fascinating evening gown. The lower part of the skirt was embroidered in a cubist pattern with gold threads. A sash with an obi bow gave a finishing touch to the garment.

LAMP SHADES.

They Should Match the Color Scheme of the Room.

The lamps having a white or glass standard seem to be particularly fitting for a young girl's room. A shade with a white ground can either be stenciled or embroidered to match any color scheme. The shade of a white lamp seen recently was of white pongee, on which was embroidered at regular intervals a cross stitched rose in two shades of pink, with a few green leaves. This was then covered with a coarse white net, and a narrow pink braid finished the edge of the top and bottom. The effect was very charming and could easily be copied.

A blue motif could be carried out on the foundation silk if blue is the dominant note in the room.

Scarfs for the bedroom furniture, cross stitched, with the same motif as that used to decorate the lamp, could be readily made.

Collar and Cuff Sets.

Among the hand embroidered accessories being worked by clever needlewomen are sets for summer frocks, including collar, cuffs and sash or girdle of colored linen worked in oriental embroidery.

One design worked on reseda green linen had an eight inch sash long enough to go once around the waist and knot the second time on one side of the front, with end reaching below the knees. These ends were scalloped and embroidered in dull blue, rose and yellow to correspond with the turnover collar and elbow cuffs.

The whole was intended for wear with a white linen morning dress, or perhaps a sheer muslin.

Washable Gowns.

The cotton dresses most recently offered have been taken from new lines designed especially for the midsummer trade, according to the Dry Goods Economist. These garments show many forms of the long tunic and wide girdles, the looped up sashes only giving the bouffant effect. Many fancy bolero jackets are shown in these new models, some of which slip on as a separate coat, while others are attached to the net lining.

Stripes are particularly good, not only in the solid white, but also in minaret yellow on white ground or in tangerine, French blue, Bermuda or black on white.

THE STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

luring the child to share its risks and its joys.

When Waitstill's boys and Pattr's girls come back to the farm they play by Saco water as their mothers and their fathers did before them. The paths through the pine woods along the river's brink are trodden smooth by their restless, wandering feet. Their eager, curious eyes search the waysides for adventure, but their babble and laughter are oftentimes heard from the ruins of an old house hidden by great trees. The stones of the cellar, all overgrown with blackberry vines, are still there, and a fragment of the brick chimney, where swallows build their nests from year to year. A wilderness of weeds, tall and luxuriant, springs up to hide the stone over which Jacob Cochran stepped daily when he issued from his door, and the polished stick with which three-year-old Pattr beats a tattoo may be a round from the very chair in which he sat, expounding the Bible according to his own vision. The thickets of sweet clover and red tipped grasses, of waving ferns and young alder bushes hide all of ugliness that belongs to the deserted spot and serve as a miniature forest in whose shade the younglings foreshadow the future at their play of home building and housekeeping. In a far corner, altogether concealed from the passerby, there is a secret treasure, a wonderful rosebush, its green leaves shining with health and vigor. When the July sun is turning the hayfields yellow the children part the bushes in the leafy corner and little Waitstill Boynton steps cautiously in to gather one splendid rose, "for father and mother."

Jacob Cochran's heart, with all its faults and frailties, has long been at peace. On a chill, dreary night in November all that was mortal of him was raised from its unhonored resting place, not far from the ruins of his old abode, and borne by three of his disciples far away to another state. The gravestones were replaced, face downward, deep, deep in the earth, and the sod laid back upon them, so that no man thenceforward could mark the place of the prophet's transient burial amid the scenes of his first and only triumphant ministry.

"It is a sad story, Jacob Cochran's," Waitstill said to her husband when she first discovered that her children had chosen the deserted spot for their play, "and yet, Ivory, the red rose blooms and blooms in the ruins of the man's house, and perhaps somewhere in the world he has left a message that matches the rose."

THE END.Im roving Slowly.

"Nicely, thank you, ma'am, but he had an awful time. They performed three autopsies on him at the hospital before he began to get better."—Baltimore American.

Didn't Agree With Him.

"If I'd always followed that rule, Maria," he remarked to his wife, "where would you be?"—London Express.

FASHION NOVELTIES.

Some Hints in Regard to the Small Accessories of Dress.

Crochet novelties in new colors and embroidered and printed linen ornaments are used on summer dresses.

There are handsome white silk ties for use on evening gowns and a wide assortment of buckles or braid and silk in rich and unusual designs.

Tango caps are in metal effects lined with flesh colored silk and trimmed with fancy metal bands, tassels and ornaments. A very attractive tip is of net, with lace motifs applied on the crown.

novel ear tabs of yellow chiffon bound with tango colored velvet and handsome rose trimming in a delicate French shade.

Roman stripes and Scotch plaids are seen in suit and dress materials in slits and in ribbons. These stripes and plaids effects even appear in bead embroideries.

Starched cottons of the sheerest kinds, especially organdie, are prominent in neckwear, gumpes and sleeve trimmings. This transparent and crisp material has taken the place of net and chiffon for such purposes.

Buttons are on everything—suits, waists, dresses, etc.—and are in beautiful colors, often matching exactly the article on which they are used. They are mostly conical in shape, Chinese in design and medium in size. Some are decorated in gold; others are in clear and colored crystal.

Among butterflies are the chenille butterflies in natural colors attached to bone hairpins, by means of which they are readily placed at any angle in the coiffure.

Butterflies made of combinations of pearl beads and rhinestones, combined with a white feather, are employed for more formal wear. A butterfly made of black net is studded with jet and pearl beads and rhinestones.

Wicker Birdcages.

Some of the new birdcages are charming in their suggestion of convenience as well as in their beauty. But they are no exception to the old cages. Some of the really antique Japanese cages, made of split willow stained mahogany color and fitted out with little ivory feet and blue and white pottery food dishes, could not possibly be surpassed by modern man. And what can be more attractive than the wicker cages of the peasants of parts of Europe? American dealers in wicker furniture are now selling cages similar to these peasant cages. They are not expensive.

The little glass bathhouses that are hooked over the open door of the bird's cage are a delight to the bird and a convenience to the human being who is caring for the bird, for they prevent splashing of water all over the room where the cage hangs. The bird splashes, to be sure, but he splashes against the little glass walls of his bathhouse.

Sponging Suits.

Every one has experienced the annoyance of having a suit worn smooth and shiny in spots but every one does not know how to restore the material to its original condition. The remedy is simple. Sponge the spots with strong indigo bluing water then press under a cloth while damp.

Original Suggestion.

A very pretty way of renewing old furniture in a child's room is to paint it with robin's egg blue enamel. When dry stick on underneath each keyhole in drawers of dresser or chiffonier very small pink tinted designs of roses, cupids (which one finds on old valentines postals, etc.) and when well stuck on in place give them a light coat of shellac. The effect is very pretty.

Bluff That is Hard to Call.

When we run out of something to say or desire to say it in a letter, we write that 'the mail is about to close and we'll have to hurry if we get it in'.

OSCEOLA MILLS

Great Parade Tonight in Connection With Evangelistic Work.

Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Johnson spoke to the ladies in the Presbyterian church. The meeting was very well attended and three ladies decided for Christ in the course of the service.

The meetings at the tabernacle were very well attended Tuesday night. Mrs. E. M. Dunkle sang "Face to Face." Only those who have heard this lady can appreciate fully the wonderful sweetness of her voice.

Rev. Johnson, after asking God's assistance, announced his text Mat. 6:33 "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

"You cannot seek Jesus Christ unless His Spirit is striving with you. If His Spirit is striving with you it is an awful thing to live an ungodly life and not to call upon God until His Spirit leaves you. You do not need to be a murderer, a thief, an adulterer or drunkard to go to hell; all you need to do is simply to neglect salvation, simply neglect to answer a call of Jesus Christ through His Holy Spirit."

At the close of his sermon 15 or 20 persons came down the aisle and promised to live better lives, making a total so far of 723.

There will be a great parade tonight, this being Anti-Booze night. The special train on the P. & S. R. R. will not leave until 11 P. M. Mr. Johnson will address the men at the tabernacle. Rev. Farrell and others will address the ladies at the meetings in the churches.

WOODLAND

The Woodland baseball team will cross bats with the Blue Ball team Thursday evening at Woodland, and a good game is promised.

The children of Woodland are enjoying the swings and shuttle recently placed in the Mineral Spring park.

Frank Snyder and wife spent the Fourth at Retort, the guests of H. C. McClure. Frank is Woodland's expert baseball pitcher, and while in Retort pitched two games for the team of that town, winning both of them.

C. E. Young and daughter Mabel and Dollie Stevens autoed to Osceola Mills Sunday and attended the evangelistic meetings.

U. B. Walker of the firm of Harbison-Walker company, steps high since his exhibit won first prize at the industrial parade in Clearfield on the Fourth.

Heradity.

Who knows what seeds each man living on earth leaves behind him, which are only destined to come up after his death? Who can say by what mysterious bond a man's fate is bound up with his children's, his descendants' how his yearnings are reflected in them, and how they are punished for his errors?—Ivan Turgenev

THE EXPRESS IS IN THIS TOWN AND IN TO STAY

For Seventy-five years--three-quarters of a century--the express has been the right-hand of the shippers of Commercial America. The Express came to Clearfield, Pa., in 1869 and it came to stay. For 45 years it has been the right-hand of Commercial Clearfield, Pa.

It is here to stay. The other day when reports went out that the express companies might retire from business, a protest went up. From whom this protest--the express companies? No! The merchants of the country--shippers everywhere--petitioned Congress that no action be taken that might have the effect of forcing the express companies to retire. Commercial organizations all over the land have joined in this appeal to Washington.

For Seventy-fiftyyears in the past and for a good many more years in the future Express service will mean

Notice to Advertisers!

A new rate for advertising will be in effect on Saturday, August 1st, 1914, and copies of this rate in pamphlet form will be ready for distribution August 20, 1914. ¶ This new rate is made necessary by the greatly increased circulation, and cost of publication of the Progress. The present circulation is about five times larger than a year ago. ¶ Many new features have been, and will be added, such as "Bud" Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff," a daily news illustration service, a free cut, or illustration service for advertisers, (proofs of which may be obtained at this office), and last but not least, our daily news service; all of which will make the Daily Progress a real up to the minute daily. ¶ The Progress goes into nearly every home in Clearfield and has an excellent circulation in most of the homes throughout the surrounding country, so that the new rate will not meet with much, if any disapproval.

SHALL WOMEN USE BALLOT?

Questions Debated at The Clearfield Chautauqua

GOOD POINTS ON BOTH SIDES

Mrs. D. J. Olyphant Speaks Against and Frank Stephens in Favor of Woman's Suffrage—Both Speakers Present Their Views in an Impassioned Manner—Argument Pro and Con Was Produced in a Convincing Way.

Women's suffrage was debated at Tuesday's sessions of the Clearfield chautauqua. Mrs. D. J. Olyphant took the negative side of the question at the afternoon meeting and Frank Stephens endorsed votes for women at the evening session. In the course of her remarks Mrs. Olyphant said:

Some people believe like the little child who misunderstood the story of creation when it was told to her and thought that God created man and then took his brains out and made woman. But sarcasm is not argument for either side. In this question it must be fundamental reasoning against theory. The anti-suffragists have been forced to take the stand that they do to refute the effect of their opponents' statements and to bring people to think intelligently of this vital question.

More Thought Needed.

There has been a maximum of feeling and a minimum of thought put upon the question. The fundamental subject is, will equal suffrage benefit conditions; will it remove menaces? Will women gain anything by the use of men's methods? In those states where equal suffrage exists it has not lessened her power when she loses her individuality by becoming a member of a political party, and this she eventually does when she gains the ballot. Her power is greatest when it is non-partisan. Woman's influence is a coherent and impressive power unmarred by political interests, and as such her power for good is greatest.

Woman in our nation have accomplished great good because they have not been hampered by the ballot. They have stood together and won the things that they wished. For woman to equalize herself with man means that she will lose his protection, and she will lose more than she has gained. Equal suffrage means equal responsibility and no additional powers.

Women Don't Need Vote.

Suffragists say, "Give us the ballot and we will readjust all existing wrongs." Woman's power to adjust wrong is greatest in the home. With additional civilization we are gaining better laws, and the men are equal to the task of doing it. Now woman has additional comfort and gracious service at her command; it is needless that she should vote.

By suffragist we are asked to believe that unless women have the ballot the old question of taxation without representation comes up. This statement is absurd, to say the least.

Man is not superior to woman because he has the power to vote, and woman is not inferior because she does not have it. It is simply a difference in function. Through specialization we reach the highest point. Woman is the home maker of the nation. Her greatest mission is the formation of the character of the future of the nation.

In those states where suffrage has been given it has not bettered the liquor question in the least.

A Preposterous Idea.

The laws of Pennsylvania as regards nearly all reforms are better than in Colorado where women have voted for 44 years. Equalized by the ballot women and men are on the same moral level. Where it has been tried the experiment of the equal vote was a failure.

To say that the fact that women do not have the ballot classes them with lunatics, idiots and criminals is preposterous. Men consider women as the highest of all ideals. To assert that they have not been just to woman or unwilling to sacrifice all for them is the basest of all falsehoods. Woman in the United States have more power than anywhere else in the world.

The anti-suffragists ask to be allowed to pursue their work as women, not as politicians. To be man's help-mate and companion is woman's mission, not to be his rival. Everywhere laws are being made to conserve the natural resources of the nation. The time has come to conserve the womanhood of the state and thus preserve the nation.

Equal Suffrage Inevitable.

Frank Stevens lectured in favor of woman suffrage last evening from the same platform upon which Mrs. Olyphant opposed equal suffrage in the afternoon. He said:

There is no doubt that in the end all people will accept equal suffrage as the only just settlement of the question.

Huerta's Envoy Predicts End of Mexican Troubles

CARRANZA AT HEAD OF REBELS

Differences Between the Two Rebel Leaders Said to Have Been Amicably Adjusted—President Wilson in Sympathy With the Constitutionalists, Declares Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs Fabela.

(By International News Service) New York, July 8.—Senator Augustin Rodriguez, Huerta's senior representative in mediation, states that direct negotiations for peace will begin in a few days in New York.

Rodriguez says the mediators and the Carranza delegates will easily agree on a provisional president, after which there will be general amnesty in Mexico.

Carranza is Big Chief.

El Paso, Tex., July 8.—Announcement came today officially that differences between the Mexican rebel leaders, Villa and Carranza have been healed and that "the war will go on in peace."

Villa wired his officials in Juarez to surrender the funds of the Carranza government, and it was given out at the Saltillo headquarters of Carranza that Villa would journey there and shake hands with Carranza and renew his pledge of loyalty to "the supreme chief."

Official statement of the points settled was kept a secret. Whether certain officials surrounding Villa and Carranza have been eliminated is not known, but the understanding of the lieutenants of the principals is "that certain changes will be made by both Carranza and Villa in the personnel of the men surrounding them."

Wilson With the Rebels.

Saltillo, Mexico, July 8.—A breakfast in honor of General Carranza was given Sunday by the members of the Mexican casino at the country place known as Hacienda Manuel Gonzalez. Yaidro Fabela, minister of foreign relations, responded to a toast and made a plea for unity. He said:

"We have and do count on the sympathy of the American people. The wise American president Woodrow Wilson, is with the constitutionalists in heart, because he is an apostle of liberty."

Would be Welcome

Rumor has it that J. Frank Snyder, Esq., and wife, will return to Clearfield to reside permanently and will erect a fine residence on West Market street. This will be glad news to Mr. Snyder's numerous friends.

A Wee Scotch Laddie
With Pipes and Kilts.

Surely a smart and handsome boy this in the Scotch kilts and with the pipes to his lips. Whether he is evolving music or not, the picture does not tell. Pictures do not give forth sound or we should know for sure. At any rate, he is making a brave show, this little Scotch laddie. Born in this country, he is of pure Scotch descent, although he never saw the rugged hills and clear lakes of the land of his father's birth. Proud he is of his ancestry and still more proud to be a citizen of the land of the free and perhaps a future president. Who knows? We have had several presidents of Scotch parentage, and we doubtless may have more. It is fine to be proud of your descent, but it is also a much grander thing to be in line for the presidency of the greatest of all nations—the United States of America.

Children's Songs in Scotland.
The kiddies of the land of heather like verse as well as the children of other countries, and they have many nice little rimes which correspond to those used in our own land. In fact, it is quite clear that some we use as our own are plagiarized straight from Scotland—such as:

Rain, rain, go away
Come again some other day
When I brew and when I bake
I'll gie you a little cake.

The rain has a reputation for being somewhat of a spoil sport in bouny Scotland, and many of the rimes, such as the above, hold a very clear wish on the part of the children that the rain man keep his distance. Coming down as they have through the centuries, it is scarce to be wondered at that many of the verses have become simply doggerel without a vestige of meaning to our modern ears—for instance, the following:

Rain, rain, rattle stones,
Dinna rain on me,
But rain on John O'Groat's house,
Far across the sea.

When the snow flies the children use this little rime:
The men o' the east
Are pyking their noses
And sending their feathers here away
When a high wind sweeps over the heather they sing:

Arthur O'Rower has broken his bands,
And he's come roving over the lands.
The king of Scots wif a' his power
Canna turn Arthur o' Rowel

The Bazaar on Wheels.

A pushcart fair is an amusing outdoor entertainment that will be novel to most. You can hire the carts for a small sum, and you get rid of the work of trimming booths. Those who have charge of the carts should wear the costumes of different peoples—Italians, Germans, negroes, Greeks or any others that fancy may select.

Articles for sale are arranged on the carts and sold from them as from ordinary booths. There are pushcarts for fancy articles, others for household things, still others for candy, for toys and for lemonade and cake, ice cream or tea. If you can get a band and have pretzels and "sausages" sold from the German cart so much the better. The "sausages" are for the grab bag—small articles rolled in long folds of brown crepe paper tied with fine string at each end.

A pushcart supper will furnish much amusement. Cups and saucers, plates, and so on, are bargained for at the first cart, and the supper itself is gathered piecemeal from the display on the various carts.—Youth's Companion.

Chum Saved Himself.

A little dog, unlabeled, had been found in the streets and taken to the pound. He was an affectionate animal and greatly endeared himself to all about the place. They called him Chum, and he joyfully responded whenever his name was spoken. As the days passed other poor, homeless dogs were put to death. Finally came Chum's last day of grace, and no one had come to claim him. The next morning dawned, and the man who was to kill Chum called him into the yard. Chum danced and wagged his tail, no doubt thinking something good was in store for him. The man then said: "Well, Chum, your time has come. You'd better say your prayers." Immediately the little forepaws were crossed, the little head bowed, and Chum said his prayers. As the little body was still in this attitude of reverence a step was heard. The attendant looked up and saw the superintendent standing there. There were tears in the eyes of each Chum is still living, but instead of being nobody's dog he is now everybody's.—St. Louis Republic.

Waves and Their Uses.

Waves are used on the ocean and in hair. They come in crests, breakers and curling irons. They are also put up in ether when they cannot be seen, and you have to take the dealer's word that you are getting your money's worth.

Warm waves are common to both summer and winter. In summer they come just when, owing to the delightful weather and a careful perusal of the Old Farmers' Almanac, you have made all your arrangements to stay home. In winter, when you have filled your furnace with two or three tons of coal and turned on all the drafts, until you have a bed of coals that would take a blue ribbon in hades and nobody can put it out but the fire department.

Waves are also seen in Wall street. Little lambs can be seen occasionally sitting upon their crests until another wave comes along and knocks them over.—Life.

Amundsen's Training.

Captain Roald Amundsen, the Norwegian who put the south pole on the map, was born in Sykkobra, Norway, July 16, 1872. His youth was spent in Christiania and on board sealers and whalers commanded by his father, Captain Jens Amundsen. He was twenty-five when he entered on his first south polar trip as the first officer of the Belgica expedition. This journey lasted two years and filled the young sailor with aspirations for further explorations in the frozen regions. His parents wanted him to become a physician, and he spent a year in a medical college. Later he went to Germany to study sciences that would aid him as an explorer. His first notable feat was to take a ship through the northwest passage, and on this trip he twice wintered in the ice.—New York World.

The Norman "Oyez."

Not many persons realize that the court crier says "oyez, oyez, oyez." Instead of "harken, harken, harken," because of a chance visit that William the Conqueror made to an English court almost 900 years ago.

William had overrun England, seized the government and placed himself at its head. Happening to enter a courtroom, he heard the crier call the assemblage to order in English. William rebuked him and on the spot decreed that the business of all English courts should be transacted in Norman French, his native tongue. Afterward the courts went back to English, but to this day "oyez, oyez, oyez," clues to court customs wherever the English language is spoken as a reminder of the great Norman who whipped King Harold in the battle of Hastings.

The Governor's Dog.

A certain ex-governor of a certain state was extravagantly fond of his dogs. One day he saw his youngest son kick a favorite blooded pup.

"You unmannerly young cub!" roared the irate parent. "How dare you kick my dog? I'll teach you to behave yourself better, sir!"

When the offender was soundly thrashed the father wiped the perspiration from his forehead.

"Let this be a lesson to you," he said, "how to treat my dogs. And, now that I think of it, you've been disrespectful to your mother of late, sir!"—New York Post.

On the Last Lap.

"Saw an odd race yesterday."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, it was between two dogs—a fox terrier and a dachshund."

"Well?"

"Two saucers of milk were placed in front of them and the object was to see which could lick up his first."

"Which won the race?"

"The dachshund won in the last lap!"—Florida Times Union.

Well Spoken.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat also take glass of Salt before eating breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Told of a Poet's "Maid."

One would like to think that Eliza Crowley, Browning's old housekeeper, was "the maid" in a story told by Browning to Grant Duff. While the poet was away on holiday in the summer of 1879 a man called at his house and, telling "the maid" that he was connected with the press, asked if it was true that Mr. Browning was dead. "I have not heard so," was the answer. "and I am sure my master is not the kind of man to do such a thing without letting me know." "Oh, I assure you," said the inquirer, "people of that sort often die in that way. Dickens did so and Thackeray likewise."—London Chronicle.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Men Do It Because They Are More Tentative Than Women.

A German professor who has been making a study of the problem declares that men fall asleep in church because they pay more attention to the sermon than do the women. Further, he declares the average woman does not begin to grasp the purport of the sermon; that she is far slower of understanding than man.

The man will watch the minister every minute, he will concentrate all his mind upon the preacher and what he is saying, he will watch his every gesture and every motion of his lips and listen to every word until finally he drops off to sleep simply because he has watched so steadily, gazed so intently, that he hypnotized himself.

If the woman does not grasp the meaning of the sermon so readily, if her mentality is not quite so keen and quick, one would think she would fall asleep. But the fact remains that she has plenty to interest her. A man can not look about the church and be interested in John Jones' cravat or William Smith's vest or Sam White's cuff buttons. He doesn't care anything about them, but a woman will sit quietly in church, she will hear what the minister is saying without giving much thought to it, but she will be interested in everything every other woman is wearing, and there is enough to keep her just moderately entertained and wide awake.—Chicago Tribune.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent, "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil, comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'—London

GREAT MEETING AT PITTSBURGH

Equalled in Size and Enthusiasm Demonstration of 1913

PREDICTS NOVEMBER RESULT

Penrose and His Lieutenants Submerged by the Great Wave of Enthusiasm Aroused for Progressive Candidate by the Visit of Former President.

Philadelphia, July 8.—Washington party leaders are jubilant over the unmistakable significance of the great Progressive gathering at Pittsburgh on Tuesday, June 30. Gifford Pinchot, candidate for United States senator; William Draper Lewis, candidate for governor; State Chairman A. Nevin Detrich and other leaders returned to Philadelphia from the second annual Progressive conference absolutely convinced that success is no longer a matter of speculation but of plurality. The Pittsburgh gathering was peculiarly adapted as a test of what may be expected in the November election in Pennsylvania. It was the occasion of the first big political speech made by Colonel Roosevelt since his return from South America. The speech was delivered in the same hall in which the colonel spoke in the spring primary campaign of 1912 when the state had run riot with pro-Roosevelt and anti-Penrose feeling. It was therefore an excellent opportunity for observing whether the spirit of western Pennsylvania had undergone any decided change and whether it was true or not, as the Penrose managers so frantically claim, that the Progressives have returned to Penrose's party.

Those who attended the wonderful 1912 demonstration had to rub their eyes on Tuesday to make sure that they were not back again in the midst of that stirring contest.

For exactly the same scenes were re-enacted. A small army met Colonel Roosevelt at the depot and ran beside his automobile the several squares to the place where the Progressive dinner was held. Spacious Exposition hall was again packed to suffocation and again the tremendous crowd shouted its welcome to Roosevelt. His every appearance was the signal for outbursts of enthusiasm. It was 1912 over again.

It was particularly significant because both Penrose and his immediate advisers and the Democratic state leaders were in Pittsburgh on the same day. But there was even a contrast to be studied. Penrose and the Democrats were absolutely submerged under the wave of Roosevelt enthusiasm.

Encouraged by the evident spirit rampant in Pittsburgh, Gifford Pinchot returned to Philadelphia to start at once the renewal of his automobile tour of the state. Before leaving he commented briefly upon the Pittsburgh meeting and its significance:

"The splendid enthusiasm exhibited by the great throngs that attended the Progressive rally only confirmed what I have seen thus far in my tour of the state," he said.

"It is perfectly evident that this is to be our year in Pennsylvania. Of course, in the light of the Pittsburgh event, it would be foolish to attempt any argument as to whether the Progressive spirit is alive or not. Of course it is. It is not only alive but spreading. It is greater than it was in 1912.

"Everything that has occurred in this campaign has demonstrated that fact. And as the campaign draws on toward its close it will become increasingly evident even to the blind followers of Penrose.

"Of course we are going to win this year. We are going to put Penrose and his machine out of business and when we do we will set our hands to the task of giving to Pennsylvania the kind of government which will bring real prosperity to all of her people."

PINCHOT A PRACTICAL WORKER

Dwight B. Heard of Arizona, one of the best known stockmen of the west and a powerful influence for range conservation, writes:

"Gifford Pinchot is not a theorist or a carpet knight, but a man who has again and again got next to the real nub of conservation questions by riding the trail through the western countries, living on plain cowman's grub, packing his tarpaulin and blankets with him, and sleeping where his work found him."

Excellent German Roads.

Great attention is paid by the city of Magdeburg, Prussia, to its bicycle roads. One can ride many miles in the country on smooth stretches of road.

Modern Proverb.

Lo, it is easy to be happy when the sun shineth and the birds sing and thine aches are forgotten, drat 'em.—Meditations of Jeremiah of Joppa.

The Difference.

An Atchison man who never held one job over two weeks, died not long ago, and people said he was a genius out of his sphere. When he was alive they said he was a loafer.—Atchison Globe.

Sheeder's Factory to Home Piano Sale

The Talk of the Town

Opened on JUNE 25th and will continue until July 25th

Our Semi-Annual Factory to Home Sale of Pianos and Player-Pianos began Thursday, June 25th, from which date we offer our entire stock of New and Used Pianos and Player-Pianos at a reduction in price of from 15 to 50 per cent. below our regular price.

During this sale the regular policy of this House will be persued and there will be no inflations of values before discounts are computed as is the custom of many Piano Houses who follow this line of selling as well as many others such as coupons, club sale schemes and etc.

One can readily appreciate the real saving to you when you realize that all BAUMEISTER and ARCHER PIANOS offered in this sale are sold from FACTORY TO HOME direct and that on every instrument the discount is from 15 to 50 per cent. less than any dealer or Carry All House who sell Pianos of the same grade.

Its a simple analysis. A dealer must pay the jobbers profit who in turn must pay the Manufacturers profit before selling to you.

We as manufacturers sell you direct thereby obviating the extra profit which you necessarily must pay the dealer.

As we have previously stated Mr. Fred T. Sheeder proprietor of the SHEEDER MUSIC HOUSE is Vice Pres. of the Baumeister Piano Co., and Pres. of the Archer Piano Co., and he is almost constantly at their spacious and well equipped factory at 511-519 East 72nd St., New York City, giving his personal attention and supervision in the manufacture of these goods, this you see gives us a decided advantage over all competitors and enables us to offer a product which we know is just what we recommend it to be and know what we are talking about when we say these goods are the best that brains, skill and money can produce.

We have been at our present location over 16 years, in that time the Baumeister Piano has been placed in a great many homes in Clearfield and vicinity, some numbering amongst the best citizens of our town and community, a list of which you will find in this advertisement. If you are in the least doubt as to the merits of these Pianos please call at our store and we will be more than pleased to furnish sufficient information, so convincing in character that you will cheerfully join the Army of the Baumeister and Archer enthusiasts.

WHAT?

What will become of all the trout that were not caught in tobacco stores this summer?

Good evening! There is something about these evenings which must remind you of the days when you went courting and it was too cool to sit outside and too warm to go into the house.

Can't see that that part of Third street lying between Market and the first alley to the north has been improved by the rains. A steam shovel might remove the accumulation of filth on that stretch of street.

Parents should encourage their young sons to join the Boy Scout movement. Better have your son wear a khaki suit than one with stripes on it.

Are you enjoying the entertainment at the chautauqua?

GET TOGETHER.

While the citizens of Clearfield are congratulating themselves over the fact that they had the best, the cleanest and the most orderly celebration of the Fourth of July of any town in this part of the state, they should not overlook the fact that this successful celebration was the result of the combined energy and goodwill of the citizens. The union of the intelligence and progressiveness of the citizens made the big industrial parade of the Fourth a success.

The same amount of energy and perseverance on the part of the citizens as a whole, directed toward the acquirement of new industries, in purchasing water works, and in making Clearfield one of the most beautiful and cleanest towns in Pennsylvania would bring results equally gratifying to every citizen of Clearfield. The ancient saying that in union there is strength is as true today as when it was uttered, and if the citizens of Clearfield unite on any project in which the whole town is interested they can work wonders in the coming years.

THE VOICE OF TRUTH.

There is nothing the Penrose party in Pennsylvania fear more than they do the voice of truth. If the truth is told of Penroseism in this state this year the result of the election will be the defeat of the agent of special privilege. The Penrose Republicans know this, hence they are very anxious to have the impression go out that Colonel Roosevelt will not speak in behalf of the Washington ticket in Pennsylvania this year.

Colonel Roosevelt's voice was injured during his strenuous exploration trip into Brazil, but he discovered at Pittsburgh that he is still able to make an audience hear him without endangering his vocal chords. And he means to speak in Pennsylvania during the present campaign, telling the truth about Penroseism in a way that will impress upon the minds of the voters the necessity for removing from political power the man who for years has ignored the people and performed the commands of the Standard Oil company and other special privilege combinations.

the matter. The question is a vital one. To say that to give woman the ballot will give her additional responsibility which will be unwelcome to her seems absurd to me. To think that any real woman would not be glad of the additional responsibility is ridiculous.

The subject divides itself into three divisions at once; they are: That the matter is not an accident but a long series of events; that the subject is so near at hand that you can not neglect to consider it, and that it is your duty as a man or woman to consider it.

The question has been up for ages, through out development of all people there has always had to be a climbing to the realization of higher things.

Movement is Growing.

Eighty years ago little had been said on the subject, now all civilized nations are considering it and many have adopted it. After eleven years of trial in Australia the measure was voted a success and adopted. The congress of Mothers of the World, which meets only every five years, adopted equal suffrage at their last meeting. There are fifty suffragist headquarters in London today. In the United States the question has come to be a highly agitated one. The world has awakened to the fact that it needs the woman's vote.

Our nation, when it adopted the common law of England, refused to woman the liberties that she had helped to win.

In spite of being without the ballot the American woman has caused two great English statesmen to say: "The strength of America lies in the superiority of her women and the United States owes more to her women than to any other factor in the nation."

Equal suffrage was introduced into Wyoming, it is true, as a joke at first, but was found so valuable that she refused to come into the union as a state unless with equal suffrage.

Ballot Belongs to Woman.

All the political parties are pledged to suffrage, and it is only a question of time until it will be a universal law. Right is always in the minority at first. There can be no more direct denial of the right of woman to the ballot. It is hers as rightfully as it is man's. True, some women do not want it, but that does not make it any more just to refuse it to the woman who does.

One of the arguments against suffrage is to say that it is unadvisable to vote. That is the only argument that cannot answer not being a lady. Another is that woman can not serve the country in time of war. True, they can not bear arms, but they are the mothers of the men who do. And, anyway, war is a curse that will soon be a thing of the past.

Would Purify Politics.

The suffragist idea is not to compel women who do not wish to, to vote, but to compel men to permit those who wish to, to do so. It is a question of right, not duty, that is involved.

Party politics has come to a place where some men say it is impos-

LUCILLE LOVE IS CAPTURED AGAIN

The Girl of Mystery Has Another Hairbreadth Escape

The eleventh of the "Lucille" series, starts with her escape from Hugo Loubeque's Mexican ranch, where she was held prisoner, and she falls into a veritable hotbed of revolutionary activity. While hiding from a troop of rebel soldiers she overhears a number of Mexicans plotting against an American ranchman. Out of sympathy for her countrymen she hurried to them and tells them of the danger which threatens. Instantly the cowboys fly to arms and meet the advancing soldiers. In the height of a fierce battle, with schrapnel and bombs bursting about her, Lucille is grabbed from her horse by a Mexican and carried away from the scene of battle to a strange hacienda, which is used as a line of operation by the Mexican troops in the vicinity. How she escapes in an auto, disguising herself in men's clothes and enters Hugo Loubeque's home to get the papers she has left some time before, and how she finally is confronted by Loubeque himself, and in fact all her troubles are shown in this line 2-reel picture at the Opera House tonight.

If you want to laugh, and then just keep on laughing you should see Ford Sterling at the Opera House tonight in one of his funniest farces, entitled "When Smaltz Loved." Mr. Sterling is certainly an adept in the line of real funny German comedians.

able to induce men to stick to their party without buying them. Parties are looking to the woman's ballot to give them hope. Women will eventually make mistakes at first. They will not remove at once, the black stains from the politics of the nation, but they will purify them, because they are the mothers of the world and will advocate those things which will better the world.

pert musicians from Italy—play the best music in the best way.

Thursday Evening.

At 7:30 there will be a concert by the Avon players, who will play "The Toy Symphony". At 7:45 a xylophone and piano performance will be given by Robert Starback and his sister and at 8:15 Chauncey J. Hopkins will lecture on "Bright Eyes and Wild Hearts of Our North Woods, or Hunting With a Camera."

A direct descendant of the great Daniel Boone, Dr. Hawkins holds within him the heart of an irresistible hunter. Game of all sorts has been his quarry—bears, moose, deer, lynxes, partridges—all have fallen alike his victims, yet he has never shed their blood. His hunting was done with a camera, and the game he "shot" was never harmed. He is bringing his "bag of game" with him, the most wonderful set of wild animal photographs in existence. His lecture is full of thrills and human interest, and local lovers of nature should hear it.

What the Old Man Feared.

The head of a certain Washington family was recently approached by his son just nearing his majority. "Father," said he, "I want to have a talk with you concerning my future. I have decided to become an artist. Have you any objections?"

The old man scratched his head reflectively and replied: "Well, no, son—provided, of course, that you don't draw on me."—Lippincott's.

Grouchy.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snooze. "To prevent the marriage of weak-minded persons. What do you think of it?" "I think it's rot," answered Mr. Grouchy. "Why, who else ever wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

"Regeneration" is another reel that will please all, and say—the weather is just fine for going to the movies.

Myrtle Stedman, once with Selig, is playing leads in the Jack London pictures being released by Hobart Bosworth. Hobart Bosworth, it will be recalled, was with the Selig also.

Grace Cunard, the girl who plays "Lucille," recently refused to play in a scene with rats. Therefore certain portions of the Lucille series are being cut out to meet her requirements.

"A Beggar Prince of India" is the title of a stirring three-reel romantic adventure play, featuring Walter Miller and Irene Wallace in the leads, now in course of production at the Victor studio. N. J. Edward Warren is directing the piece.

Herbert Rawlinson, leading man in Otis Turner's special feature company (Universal) not only loves to be an ideal type of American manhood, but such is actually the case. Mr. Rawlinson is one of the most well known amateur athletes in Southern California. He has medals for swimming and rowing, and has only recently acquired a biplane with no other motive in view than the outdoor sport it will afford.

"May we do your head in bronze?" King Edward, President Wilson and Mark Twain are among those whose faces we have preserved to future generations.

So wrote an art company to Jack Warren Kerrigan, handsome star of the Victor productions Universal.

"Phew!" said the actor, when he received the letter. "Some classy company I'm in—a monarch, a president, and a humorist."

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Only the busy person is happy—and systematic, daily, useful work is man's greatest blessing.

DELICIOUS SUMMER DESSERTS.

There is no dessert that quite gratifies the taste like a frozen one in hot weather. The combinations are legion, but the most popular are those made of fruit juices.

Italian Sherbet.—Boil together 15 minutes, one pound of sugar and one pint of water. Set aside to cool; when cold add half a cupful of lemon juice, a cupful and a half of orange juice, the same amount of grape fruit juice. Strain and freeze slowly. Serve heaped in the half shells of the oranges or grape fruit.

Raspberry Cream.—A cupful of raspberry juice, a cupful of sugar and a pint of cream used in this proportion, adding a tablespoonful of lemon juice to add to the color as well as flavor, makes a most delicious frozen dish.

Orange and Lemon Cream.—This is a recipe which may be made at any season, as such fruit is nearly always to be found in the market. Take the juice of three oranges, two lemons, two cupfuls of sugar and a quart of thin cream. Strain the fruit juice, add the sugar and when dissolved add the cream, and freeze.

Chocolate ice cream with marshmallow sauce is an especially good combination. To make the ice cream add the melted chocolate to a plain ice cream, mixing well. For the sauce—Cut a fourth of a pound of marshmallows in pieces and melt in a double boiler. Dissolve a fourth of a cupful of confectioners sugar in a fourth of a cupful of boiling water and add gradually to the marshmallows. Continue stirring until well blended. Cool before serving.

Chocolate sauce is always a favorite with plain ice cream. Melt slowly one square of bitter chocolate, add a tablespoonful of butter, one cupful of sugar and a third of a cupful of boiling water. Boil 15 minutes. Add the butter when nearly done, also a teaspoonful of vanilla when the sauce is cool.

Duty of Charitable.

We give most worthily when we assume the worthy use of our gifts. The idle flinging of a coin to an undeserving beggar is not true benevolence; it is a cheap and easy way of buying relief to our own feelings. So to give to any cause which does not wisely and economically expend its receipts is foolish charity. In a word, it is as much a part of a giver's duty to examine financial reports as it is to read appeals for aid.

The Mysterious Thyroid.

The thyroid gland, which is situated about the lower part of the throat, is still a medical mystery.

Practically nothing is known as to its uses and very little about the cause of disease in it. Goiter is a nonmalignant enlargement of the thyroid gland. The swelling may be no more than a mere thickening, or it may grow into a mass weighing several pounds. It is common in mountainous districts and where there is magnesium limestone in the soil and drinking water. Operation may be necessary, but goiter will usually yield to treatment and is rarely fatal. Malignant disease of the thyroid gland is often associated with overstrain or sudden shock. Here operation is generally necessary and is a very serious matter indeed. In some mysterious way removal of the thyroid gland affects the mental powers, and the unfortunate person who has his thyroid removed is in great danger of losing his wits, more particularly his memory.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fiddled Into Office.

Lossing relates that in 1848 he met at Oswego, N. Y., Major Cochran, then nearly eighty years old, a son-in-law of General Philip Schuyler, who told the story of his election to congress during the administration of the elder Adams. A vessel was to be launched on one of the lakes in interior New York, and people came from afar to see it. The young folks gathered there, determined to have a dance at night. There was a fiddle, but no fiddler. Young Cochran was an amateur performer, and his services were demanded. He grunted the joyous company, and at the supper table one of the gentlemen remarked in commendation of his talents that he was "fit for congress." The matter was talked up, and he was nominated and elected a representative in congress for the district then comprising the whole of New York west of Schenectady. He always claimed to have "fiddled himself into congress."

Philadelphia, July 8—Rain and wet grounds prevented the Athletics and Detroit Tigers from clashing Tuesday in the opening game of their series at Shibe Park. The series is a most important one, as the Tigers are pushing the Mackmen hard for the first place in the pennant race, and a victory either way will mean a lot to the winner. NOTES

New York, July 8—The New York American League Club Tuesday completed a deal which Birdie Cree, for years the star fielder of the club, was purchased from the Baltimore Internationals. Cree was sold to Baltimore last winter. He had had a poor season in 1913 after breaking an arm in 1912. His work with Baltimore was so good Chance decided to recall him.

Olympian yesterday won the second race of the powerboat trials to select a challenger for the Richardson trophy now held by Canada. Michigan, which won the first race, was second; Valiant was third and South Shore fourth. Pitcher, Edward Manning, recently purchased by the Rochester club, International league, from the St. Louis Americans, was run over by an automobile at Rochester, N. Y., yesterday and his foot injured. He was taken to an emergency hospital, and will be laid up for some time.

Eddie Mattison, former manager of the DuBois team, who is now with the Philadelphia Nationals, pitched his first game on Monday, for that team and although he lost, pitched a wonderful game. He struck out seven, as compared to one of the opposing pitcher, and walked two.

Welch Defeats Ritchie.

Olympia Stadium, London, July 8—After knocking at the pugilistic door of fame for the last eight years, Freddie Welch of Pontypridd, Wales, lightweight champion of England, won the world's lightweight championship last night. Referee Eugene Corri awarded the Welshman the decision over Willie Ritchie, the American champion, after 20 rounds of fierce fighting.

Not one person in all the great throng that viewed the fight questioned the decision of the referee. It was generally agreed that Welch had fairly won. It was simply a case of Welch's ring generalship and his all-round skill measured against Ritchie's youth, his willingness and his aggressiveness and the former qualities won.

Another Challenge.

Would you be kind enough to issue a challenge through your paper on behalf of Paddy Krause (118 pounds) and Jack Levan (156 to 160 pounds), both white, to meet any boys in your locality. They are both good boys and can deliver the goods. If the Clearfield sports can dig up a pair to meet them, we can easily come to terms. A. BOULDIN, Mgr.: 329 Howard Ave., Altoona, Pa.

HAD FAITH IN HIS IDEAS.

Julius Verne Felt the Things He Wrote Would Come to Pass.

Anything new about that wonderful man, Julius Verne, is invariably interesting. And in the Paris Temps Felix Duquesnel, who knew the author well, tells quite a lot about him that is "not generally known."

"I believe I invent possible things," Verne used to say, "which is very naive of me, because all that I write will be realized. Human knowledge will demolish the impossible." But if he believed in the realization of his imaginings his friends did not at first believe that he would be successful as an author.

One day, according to M. Duquesnel, when Verne was in the company of a number of his friends, he exclaimed with great seriousness:

"Mes enfants, I think I am about to leave you. I have the idea which, according to Girardin, is necessary to a man if he is going to make his fortune. I am going to write a romance in a new form of my own invention. If it succeeds it will be, I'm certain, the lode of the gold mine."

The friends laughed. "Laugh away," said Verne, "we shall see who laughs last." A few weeks later "Five Weeks in a Balloon" appeared and was an immediate success. He had found his "lode," which he continued to develop for half a century.—London Letter in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Promises In Politics.

During a municipal campaign in Chicago a politician dropped in one morning to see a certain grocer. During the conversation that took place the politician asked, "And I may count upon your support, may I not?"

"Why, no, I am sorry to say," replied the grocer, "the fact is, I have promised my support to the other candidate."

The politician laughed. "Ah," said he, "in politics promising and performing are two different things."

"In that case," said the grocer cordially, "I shall be glad to give you my promise, sir."—Lippincott's.

ADVOCATES CHANGE IN RULES

Most Astute Baseball Men Admit Problem of Intentional Pass is Hard Problem to Solve.

Jim McGuire, for many years a leading major league catcher and now acting as coach and scout for the Detroit team, declares that the greatest and best change in the rules of baseball was that making foul balls strikes if the batsman has less than two strikes upon him. Says McGuire: "The rule met the problem brought up by the constant fouling off of balls by batters until the poor pitcher was tired, and because of sheer exhaustion had to put the ball over the plate with nothing on it but the hide that the factory endowed it with. It was an easy matter for some of the clever men of ye olden days to foul off a dozen balls until that one clothed in nakedness lobbed up to the plate for slaughter."

"The next problem that must be faced and solved is the intentional pass affair. There is apparently no way in which to force a pitcher to pitch to a man if he wants to pass him. It has become so bad nowadays that the managers of the clubs simply tell their men when to pass certain batters and the pitcher and catcher go through the motions of pitching to him, while the crowds in the grand stand generally howl in derision. They always do it if it's a home man at bat, with a couple of men waiting to score and one run needed to tie."

"This is the one problem that the most astute baseball men in the country admit there seems to be no solution for. They also admit that it is a problem that must be solved."

"It is only in recent years that the intentional pass problem has come up. Back in the old days there was no such thing as the intentional pass. It wasn't considered a game or a necessary thing. But today it is considered a part of strategic baseball."

"Even the best batsmen hit safely only about one in four times. A 300 hitter gets three hits in ten times officially at bat. He faces a pitcher oftener than that, however, with his passes and bases for being hit by pitched ball."

"The odds are all with the pitcher even when facing the best batters. Nevertheless, few managers refuse to use the intentional pass and how they can be forced to discard it is the question that must be settled."

CHARLIE DOON VERY LUCKY

Despite Ravages of Federal's Philadelphia National Team is Making Excellent Showing.

Charlie Doon has been lucky. The Federals tried to ruin his team, and did succeed in shooting his infield full of holes, but though they robbed him of Seaton, Brennan and Camnitz they failed to weaken his pitching staff.

Instead of standing out in the league with almost no pitching, the Philadel-

Grover Cleveland Alexander.

Alexander. Chalmers has come through in great shape, while Mayer and Marshall have developed and now appear to be dependable twirlers.

Besides this, he has grabbed two youngsters who are likely to show a lot before the year ends. Oeschger and Jacobs look as though they had the goods and only need a little more experience to deliver.

The infield problem, however, is not solved. The loss of Doolan and Knabe has been serious.

Good Sunday Combination.

President Ward of the Brooklyn Feds will permit his team to play on Sundays. Branch Rickey refuses to manage his crew on Sunday, and Mathewson refuses to pitch on Sundays. Why not make Rickey Ward's manager and Matty his star pitcher?

His Jinx a Sticker.

George Dauss cannot overcome his St. Louis jinx, it seems. The young right-hander always has a lot of stuff against the Browns but is seldom very successful in getting it past the batters.

What She Was Doing.

One evening the mother of a small miss aged five said: "I see that you are yawning; it's time you were in bed." "Oh, that wasn't a yawn, mama," replied Grace. "I was merely practising a new kind of smile."

The Story of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

His future spouse was to write out a little paper for his signature; just a friendly little paper to be kept quite private and confidential between themselves, stating that she was to do no work outside of the house; that her pension was to be her own; that she was to have $5 in cash on the first of every month in lieu of wages, and that in case of his death occurring first she was to have a third of his estate, and the whole of it if at the time of his decease he was still pleased with his bargain. The only points in this contract that the deacon really understood were that he was paying only $5 a month for a housekeeper to whom a Judge had offered $12; that, as he had expected to pay at least $8, he could get a boy for the remaining $3, and so be none the worse in pocket; also that if he could keep his daughters from getting his money, he didn't care a hang who had it, as he hated the whole human race with entire impartiality. If Jane Tillman didn't behave herself he had pleasing visions of converting most of his fortune into cash and having it dropped off the bridge some dark night, when the doctor had given him up and proved to his satisfaction that death would occur in the near future.

All this being harmoniously settled, the deacon drove away and caused the announcement of his immediate marriage to be posted directly below that of Waitstill and Ivory Boynton.

A "spite match," the community in general called the deacon's marriage, and many a man and many a woman, too, regarding the amazing publishing notice in the frame up at the meeting house, felt that in Jane Tillman Deacon Baxter had met his Waterloo.

CHAPTER XXX.

Two Heavens.

At the very moment that Deacon Baxter was starting out on his quest for a housekeeper, Patty and Mark drove into the Mason dooryard, and the sisters flew into each other's arms. The dress that Mark had bought for Patty was the usual charming and unsuitable offering of a man's spontaneous affection, being of dark violet cloth with a wadded cape lined with satin.

Waitstill in her plain flussy-woolsey was entranced with Patty's beauty and elegance, and the two girls had a few minutes of sisterly talk, of interchange of radiant hopes and confidences before Mark tore them apart, their cheeks wet with happy tears.

As the Mason house faded from view Patty waved her muff until the last moment, turned in her seat and said:

"Mark, dear, do you think your father would care if I spent the twenty dollar gold piece he gave me for Waitstill? She will be married in a fortnight, and if my father does not give her the few things she owns she will go to her husband more ill provided even than I was. I have so much, dear Mark, and she so little."

"It's your own wedding present to use as you wish," Mark answered, "and it's exactly like you to give it away. Go ahead and spend it if you want to. I can always earn enough to keep you without anybody's help." And Mark, after cracking the whip valiantly, kissed his wife just over the violet ribbons and with sleigh bells jingling, they sped over the snow toward what seemed Paradise to the New Hampshire village where they had been married and where their new life would begin.

So a few days later Waitstill received a great parcel which relieved her of many feminine anxieties and she began to shape and cut and stitch during all the hours she had to herself. They were not many, for every day she trudged to the Boynton farm and began with youthful enthusiasm the household tasks that were so soon to be hers by right.

"Don't waste too much time and strength here, my dearest," said Ivory. "Do you suppose for a moment I shall keep you long on this lonely farm? I am ready for admission to the bar or I am fitted to teach in the best school in New England. Nothing has held me here but my mother, and in her present condition of mind we can safely take her anywhere. We will never live where there are so many memories and associations to sadden and hamper us but go where the best opportunities offers and as soon as may be my wife will be a pearl of great price," he added fondly, and I intend to provide a right setting for her."

Ivory was right. Waitstill Baxter was indeed a jewel of a woman. She had little knowledge but much wisdom, and after all knowledge stands them a garland for ashes the old joy for mourning the game of prayer for the spirit of heaviness.

"Our little brother is never in the way."

 There are two heavens ***

Both made of love—on the conceivable

Even by the other so it is

The other far on this side of the stars

By men called home

And these two heavens met over at

Boynton's during these cold, white

glistening December days

Lois Boynton found hers first. After a windy moonlit night a morning dawned in which a bush seemed to be on the earth. The cattle huddled to gether in the farmyards and the fowls shrank into their feathers. The sky was gray, and suddenly the white heralds came floating down like ac-seeking for paths and camping places.

Waitstill turned Mrs. Boynton's bed so that she could look out of the window. Slope after slope dazzling in white crust rose one upon another and vanished as they slipped away into the dark green of the pine forests.

Then

 there fell from out the skies

A strange soft, spotless something pure

as light

It could not be called a storm, for there had been no wind since sunrise, no whirling fury, no drifting, only a still,

steady, solemn fall of crystal flakes hour after hour, hour after hour.

Mrs. Boynton's book of books was open on the bed, and her finger marked a passage in her favorite Bible post.

"Here it is, daughter," she whispered

"I have found it, in the same chapter where the morning stars sing together and the sons of God shout for

joy. The Lord speaks to Job out of the whirlwind and says 'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow, or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail?' Sit near me, Waitstill, and look out on the hills. 'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?' No, not yet, but please God I shall, and into many other treasures soon," and she closed her eyes.

All day long the air ways were filled with the glittering army of the snowflakes, all day long the snow grew deeper and deeper on the ground, and on the breath of some white winged wonder that passed Lois Boynton's window her white soul forsook its

"earth lot" and took flight at last.

They watched beside her, but never knew the moment of her going. Her face was so like an angel's in its shil-lently serene that the few who loved her best could not look upon her with anything but reverent joy. On earth

she had known nothing but the "broken acres" but in heaven she would find the "perfect round." There at last,

on the other side of the stars, she could remember right, poor Lois Boynton!

For weeks afterward the village was shrouded in snow as it had never been before within memory, but in every happy household the home life deepened day by day. The books came out in the long evenings; the grandfathers told old tales under the inspiration of the hearth fire, the children gathered on their wooden stools to roast apples and pop corn, and hearts came closer together than when summer called the housemates to wander here and there in fields and woods and beside the river.

Over at Boynton's, when the snow was whirling and the wind howling round the chimneys of the high gabled old farmhouse when every window had its frame of ermine and fringe of leaves and the sleet rattled furiously against the glass, then Ivory would throw a giant log on the bank of coals between the firepots, the kettle would begin to sing and the cat come from some snug corner to curl and purr on the braided hearth rug.

School was in session, and Ivory and

Rod had their textbooks of an evening

but oh what a new and strange joy to study when there was a sweet woman sitting near with her workbasket—a woman wearing a shining braid of hair

as if it were a coronet, a woman of lean eyes and tender lips, one who could feel as well as think, one who could be a man's comrade as well as his dear love. Truly the second heaven this one on this side of the stars

by men called home, was very present

over at Boynton's.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.
"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."
This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

Cabbage For Salads.

There are so many ways of using cold boiled cabbage for warming up in some way that it is not often enough thought of as salad material. But cold cabbage with a French dressing makes a good salad, and the coarse outer green leaves of new cabbage, which would not be good in the uncooked salad, can be advantageously used in this way. It may be shredded and used with beets and other cooked vegetables with a cooked dressing as a salad.

The soft creamy dressings are favored with cabbage salad, but French dressing with cream is of all the most quickly put together and comparatively little known. To make this put the seasonings of salt and pepper with the oil, add the cream in about equal quantities and then the vinegar, drop by drop, stirring rapidly. This is a little quicker method than dropping the cream drop by drop into French dressing, and if carefully done the cream will not curdle. It is delicious and thicker than vinegar and cream simply.

Prettier and more elaborate salads can be made with cabbage than those who regard this as a vulgar vegetable imagine. It may be mixed with dice of celery and then garnished with either minced boiled beef or grated carrot, or both, these being put on it so as to form a cross or in stripes.

Shredded green peppers added to cabbage make it seem a little more elegant as a salad, and a teaspoonful of freshly grated horseradish sprinkled thoroughly through shredded cabbage before a cream dressing is added makes it a most excellent spring salad. The bacon dressings are homely, but bits of cold bacon scattered through the salad may be highly acceptable.

For compound salads, which are salads made of little heaps or mounds of different colors—green, red, yellow, white or any shade preferable—the cabbage, scalded and made creamy looking, then crisped, is serviceable.

Cookery Kinks.

Have you ever cried—
Cooking apricots and dried peaches together?

Cooking a few bits of orange peel with baked apples or pears?

Combining in a salad cold cooked diced beets and carrots dressed with mayonnaise dressing?

Putting a sprig of mint in the water in which potatoes are boiling to give them an odd and delicious flavor? Serving salmon with slices of orange instead of lemon?

Making strawberry frosting for cake by simply mashing five or six red berries and mixing with confectioner's sugar until stiff enough to spread?

Using equal parts of cold boiled macaroni, cooked diced carrots and canned or fresh peas to make a novel salad?

Preserving Eggs.

When eggs are plentiful and can be bought cheaply obtain from a reliable source new laid eggs, placing these in jars. Obtain a tin of water glass sufficient for a great many eggs, which dissolve according to instruction on tin and pour over the eggs, tie down, and when eggs are dear these can be used for all cooking purposes and will be found to poach or boil like fresh ones. When taking out of the liquid rinse in warm water and prick with a needle those for boiling to prevent cracking in the process. Take out of preserving liquid only as required for use.

Spanish Rice.

For a meat substitute, rice cooked in this way cannot be excelled. It is also a great time and fuel saver. Into a buttered casserole put one-half cupful washed rice, add one-half cupful grated cheese, five small onions sliced thinly, one large cupful of canned tomatoes, two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls milk, one-eighth teaspoonful pepper, one cupful hot water and, lastly, two tablespoonfuls of minced pickles or olives. Bake until rice is tender in moderate oven, usually one hour.

Spaghetti in Chafing Dish.

Cook the spaghetti until tender, and it can be broken up or not as one prefers, although it takes an expert to serve it when not cut up. When the spaghetti has been drained add to it one tablespoonful butter, a cupful of milk in which has been stirred a tablespoonful of flour, mustard, salt and pepper. Stir until it boils, then allow to simmer a few minutes and then stir in tomato sauce that has been made with strained tomatoes in which a bit of onion has been cooked. Serve with the dish hot.

Substitute For Whipped Cream.

Put about two quarts of fresh butter-milk into a close muslin bag, with a pinch of salt. Hang it up, with a basin under it, and leave for twenty-four hours to let the water drip out. Turn the curds on to a plate, sweeten to taste, add a few drops of vanilla essence or other flavoring and whip up.

Economy In Coffee Making.

Save the coffee grounds, boil them up in fresh water and strain. Boil the liquid and use it instead of water when making fresh coffee. This is done in France and improves the coffee, besides being very economical, as less coffee is needed.

THE RIGHT SHADE.

An Important Point in the Selection of the Smart Costume.

RED CHARMEUSE EVENING GOWN.

It is wise to study the season's colors, especially if you can afford but one gown or suit or hat, so that whatever is new in your wardrobe may be of absolutely the correct shade.

The very deep shades of blue are fashionable not only for the street, but in the evening. In fact, the night and indigo blues threaten to oust black for the quieter sort of dinner costumes.

In transparent materials pastel blues and greens are very good indeed, and there is a smoky tone of gray that is pronounced charming by women who have hitherto favored steel and slate shades.

All the golden brown shades are good for street costumes. For evening use there is a tone of orange as fiery yellow as the amberine, but which is, oddly enough, beautiful in malines and chiffon.

Ultra-fashionables take up the richer shades of red, as seen in the ripe currant or the flame of a wood fire. There is also a blue vermillion tone, which is more like a half ripe plum than anything else in nature.

Red charmeuse draped with white chandilly lace was used in the development of this fascinating evening gown. The lower part of the skirt was embroidered in a cubist pattern with gold threads. A sash with an obi bow gave a finishing touch to the garment.

LAMP SHADES.

They Should Match the Color Scheme of the Room.

The lamps having a white or glass standard seem to be particularly fitting for a young girl's room. A shade with a white ground can either be stenciled or embroidered to match any color scheme. The shade of a white lamp seen recently was of white pongee, on which was embroidered at regular intervals a cross stitched rose in two shades of pink, with a few green leaves. This was then covered with a coarse white net, and a narrow pink braid finished the edge of the top and bottom. The effect was very charming and could easily be copied.

A blue motif could be carried out on the foundation silk if blue is the dominant note in the room.

Scarfs for the bedroom furniture, cross stitched, with the same motif as that used to decorate the lamp, could be readily made.

Collar and Cuff Sets.

Among the hand embroidered accessories being worked by clever needlewomen are sets for summer frocks, including collar, cuffs and sash or girdle of colored linen worked in oriental embroidery.

One design worked on reseda green linen had an eight inch sash long enough to go once around the waist and knot the second time on one side of the front, with end reaching below the knees. These ends were scalloped and embroidered in dull blue, rose and yellow to correspond with the turnover collar and elbow cuffs.

The whole was intended for wear with a white linen morning dress, or perhaps a sheer muslin.

Washable Gowns.

The cotton dresses most recently offered have been taken from new lines designed especially for the midsummer trade, according to the Dry Goods Economist. These garments show many forms of the long tunic and wide girdles, the looped up sashes only giving the bouffant effect. Many fancy bolero jackets are shown in these new models, some of which slip on as a separate coat, while others are attached to the net lining.

Stripes are particularly good, not only in the solid white, but also in minaret yellow on white ground or in tangerine, French blue, Bermuda or black on white.

luring the child to share its risks and its joys.

When Waitstill's boys and Pattr's girls come back to the farm they play by Saco water as their mothers and their fathers did before them. The paths through the pine woods along the river's brink are trodden smooth by their restless, wandering feet. Their eager, curious eyes search the waysides for adventure, but their babble and laughter are oftenest heard from the ruins of an old house hidden by great trees. The stones of the cellar, all overgrown with blackberry vines, are still there, and a fragment of the brick chimney, where swallows build their nests from year to year. A wilderness of weeds, tall and luxuriant, springs up to hide the stone over which Jacob Cochran stepped daily when he issued from his door, and the polished stick with which three-year-old Pattr beats a tattoo may be a round from the very chair in which he sat, expounding the Bible according to his own vision. The thickets of sweet clover and red tipped grasses, of waving ferns and young alder bushes hide all of ugliness that belongs to the deserted spot and serve as a miniature forest in whose shade the younglings foreshadow the future at their play of home building and housekeeping. In a far corner, altogether concealed from the passerby, there is a secret treasure, a wonderful rosebush, its green leaves shining with health and vigor. When the July sun is turning the hayfields yellow the children part the bushes in the leafy corner and little Waitstill Boynton steps cautiously in to gather one splendid rose, "for father and mother."

Jacob Cochran's heart, with all its faults and frailties, has long been at peace. On a chill, dreary night in November all that was mortal of him was raised from its unhonored resting place, not far from the ruins of his old abode, and borne by three of his disciples far away to another state. The gravestones were replaced, face downward, deep, deep in the earth, and the sod laid back upon them, so that no man thenceforward could mark the place of the prophet's transient burial amid the scenes of his first and only triumphant ministry.

"It is a sad story, Jacob Cochran's," Waitstill said to her husband when she first discovered that her children had chosen the deserted spot for their play, "and yet, Ivory, the red rose blooms and blooms in the ruins of the man's house, and perhaps somewhere in the world he has left a message that matches the rose."

THE END.

Im roving Slowly.
"How is your cousin getting on, Jane?"

"Nicely, thank you, ma'am, but he had an awful time. They performed three autopsies on him at the hospital before he began to get better."—Baltimore American.

Didn't Agree With Him.

"You should never take anything that doesn't agree with you," the physician told him.

"If I'd always followed that rule, Maria," he remarked to his wife, "where would you be?"—London Express.

COMMENCEMENT GOWNS.

Soft and Clinging Fabrics Favored in Their Creation.

EMBROIDERED NET GOWN

Dainty gowns for the commencement exercises of girls' schools or colleges are now in demand. The style tendencies of the season enable designers to turn out frocks that are not only suitable for the young girl, but that are both dainty and attractive. Soft crapes, dainty nets and similar fabrics are preferred for the purpose. Illustrated here is an attractive gown of embroidered net with wide satin girdle. The tiered skirt has the fashionable pegtop outline. With the gown white suede shoes and a wide satin hair band were worn.

FASHION NOVELTIES.

Some Hints in Regard to the Small Accessories of Dress.

Crochet novelties in new colors and embroidered and printed linen ornaments are used on summer dresses.

There are handsome white silk ties for use on evening gowns and a wide assortment of buckles or braid and silk in rich and unusual designs.

Tango caps are in metal effects lined with flesh colored silk and trimmed with fancy metal bands, tassels and ornaments. A very attractive tip is of net, with lace motifs applied on the crown.

novel ear tabs of yellow chiffon bound with tango colored velvet and handsome rose trimming in a delicate French shade.

Roman stripes and Scotch plaids are seen in suit and dress materials in slits and in ribbons. These stripes and plaid effects even appear in bead embroideries.

Starched cottons of the sheerest kinds, especially organdie, are prominent in neckwear, gumpes and sleeve trimmings. This transparent and crisp material has taken the place of net and chiffon for such purposes.

Buttons are on everything—suits, waists, dresses, etc.—and are in beautiful colors, often matching exactly the article on which they are used. They are mostly conical in shape, Chinese in design and medium in size. Some are decorated in gold; others are in clear and colored crystal.

Among butterflies are the chenille butterflies in natural colors attached to bone hairpins, by means of which they are readily placed at any angle in the coiffure.

Butterflies made of combinations of pearl beads and rhinestones, combined with a white feather, are employed for more formal wear. A butterfly made of black net is studded with jet and pearl beads and rhinestones.

Wicker Birdcages.

Some of the new birdcages are charming in their suggestion of convenience as well as in their beauty. But they are no exception to the old cages. Some of the really antique Japanese cages, made of split willow stained mahogany color and fitted out with little ivory feet and blue and white pottery food dishes, could not possibly be surpassed by modern man. And what can be more attractive than the wicker cages of the peasants of parts of Europe? American dealers in wicker furniture are now selling cages similar to these peasant cages. They are not expensive.

The little glass bathhouses that are hooked over the open door of the bird's cage are a delight to the bird and a convenience to the human being who is caring for the bird, for they prevent splashing of water all over the room where the cage hangs. The bird splashes, to be sure, but he splashes against the little glass walls of his bathhouse.

Sponging Suits.

Every one has experienced the annoyance of having a suit worn smooth and shiny in spots but every one does not know how to restore the material to its original condition. The remedy is simple. Sponge the spots with strong indigo bluing water then press under a cloth while damp.

Original Suggestion.

A very pretty way of renewing old furniture in a child's room is to paint it with robin's egg blue enamel. When dry stick on underneath each keyhole in drawers of dresser or chiffonier very small pink tinted designs of roses, cupids (which one finds on old valentines postals, etc.) and when well stuck on in place give them a light coat of shellac. The effect is very pretty.

Bluff That is Hard to Call.

OSCEOLA MILLS

Great Parade Tonight in Connection With Evangelistic Work.

Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Johnson spoke to the ladies in the Presbyterian church. The meeting was very well attended and three ladies decided for Christ in the course of the service.

The meetings at the tabernacle were very well attended Tuesday night. Mrs. E. M. Dunkle sang "Face to Face." Only those who have heard this lady can appreciate fully the wonderful sweetness of her voice.

Rev. Johnson, after asking God's assistance, announced his text Mat. 6:33 "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

"You cannot seek Jesus Christ unless His Spirit is striving with you. If His Spirit is striving with you it is an awful thing to live an ungodly life and not to call upon God until His Spirit leaves you. You do not need to be a murderer, a thief, an adulterer or drunkard to go to hell; all you need to do is simply to neglect salvation, simply neglect to answer a call of Jesus Christ through His Holy Spirit."

At the close of his sermon 15 or 20 persons came down the aisle and promised to live better lives, making a total so far of 723.

There will be a great parade tonight, this being Anti-Booze night. The special train on the P. & S. R. R. will not leave until 11 P. M. Mr. Johnson will address the men at the tabernacle. Rev. Farrell and others will address the ladies at the meetings in the churches.

WOODLAND

The Woodland baseball team will cross bats with the Blue Ball team Thursday evening at Woodland, and a good game is promised.

The children of Woodland are enjoying the swings and shuttle recently placed in the Mineral Spring park.

Frank Snyder and wife spent the Fourth at Retort, the guests of H. C. McClure. Frank is Woodland's expert baseball pitcher, and while in Retort pitched two games for the team of that town, winning both of them.

C. E. Young and daughter Mabel and Dollie Stevens autoed to Osceola Mills Sunday and attended the evangelistic meetings.

U. B. Walker of the firm of Harrison-Walker company, steps high since his exhibit won first prize at the industrial parade in Clearfield on the Fourth.

Heradity.

Who knows what seeds each man living on earth leaves behind him, which are only destined to come up after his death? Who can say by what mysterious bond a man's fate is bound up with his children's, his descendants' how his yearnings are reflected in them, and how they are punished for his errors?—Ivan Turgenev

THE EXPRESS IS IN THIS TOWN AND IN TO STAY

For Seventy-five years—three-quarters of a century—the express has been the right-hand of the shippers of Commercial America. The Express came to Clearfield, Pa., in 1869 and it came to stay. For 45 years it has been the right-hand of Commercial Clearfield, Pa.

It is here to stay. The other day when reports went out that the express companies might retire from business, a protest went up. From

Notice to Advertisers!

A new rate for advertising will be in effect on Saturday, August 1st, 1914, and copies of this rate in pamphlet form will be ready for distribution August 20, 1914. ¶ This new rate is made necessary by the greatly increased circulation, and cost of publication of the Progress. The present circulation is about five times larger than a year ago. ¶ Many new features have been, and will be added, such as "Bud" Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff," a daily news illustration service, a free cut, or illustration service for advertisers, (proofs of which may be obtained at this office), and last but not least, our daily news service; all of which will make the Daily Progress a real up to the minute daily. ¶ The Progress goes into nearly every home in Clearfield and has an excellent circulation in most of the homes throughout the surrounding country, so that the new rate will not meet with much, if any disapproval.
